CLEVELAND CONVENTION.

OHIO DEMOCRATS PLACE A STATE TICKET IN THE FIELD

The Proceedings of the Meeting and the Candidates Nominated—The Platform as Adopted—A Harmonious Gathering. President Cleveland Indorsed.

CLEVELAND July 22—At 10 30 o'clock this morning the convention was opened by the introduction by Hon Henry Bohl of Hon George Seney as permanent chairman of the body, and Mr Seney proceeded to read from manuscript a well written speech, the good points being liberally applauded His reference to the Hon Allen Butler county (Campbell), was vociferously cheered The decorations and arrangements for the meeting in music hall were superb

Fully half of ladies graced the scene by their presence, giving the ensemble a graceful aspect

The press accommodations were simply perfect

The first business was the report of the committee on credentials there were no contests

Hon Elmer White read the following platform agreed upon by the committee on resolutions

The Democratic party of Ohio in convention assembled proclaims its hearty and unqualified indorsement of the honest patriotic and economical administration of President Cleveland We demand such judicious reduction of the of the present internal revenue tariff as shall result in producing an income sufficient only to meet the expenses of an economical administration of government, the payment of liberal pensions to Union soldiers and sailors and the payment of the interest and principal of the public debt and, if necessary, we favor such reduction of internal revenue, except on liquors as will prevent the accumulation of surplus in the National treasury, and we denounce any attempt to abolish the tax on liquors for the purpose of keeping up the present unjust, unequal and onerous tariff of our growth and heritage of our people It should promise limitless development and riches relief to a crowding population and homes to thrift and industry These inestimable advantages should be jealously guarded, and a careful and enlightened policy on the part of the government should secure them to the people

"We demand that all lands of the government be held for actual settlers who are citizens of the United States, and for those who declare their intention to become such

We are in hearty sympathy with all people struggling to free themselves from the environment of despotism, and especially does the long and gallant struggle of Ireland for the priceless boon of Home Rule, and the rights of manhood awake our warmest applause and command our heartiest good wishes for speedy success

Labor being the chief factor and great conservator of free and liberal institutions, should enjoy its full share of the common benefits derived therefrom therefore, we favor such restraints of the centralization and encroachment of corporate power as will bring the best possible protection of labor to him, and at the same time conserve the interests of honestly employed capital We favor such legislation on the question as will prevent the landing, for permanent residence of aliens who are not willing to declare their intention of becoming citizens of the United States We declare our opposition to the importation of contract labor, and we demand speedy punishment of all persons inciting riot and revolution against republican institutions.

We denounce the present Republican state administration as weak, partisan, personal and unbusinesslike, we call upon the people of Ohio to turn out of power a state government whose only apparent mission is to amount expenditures multiply offices create deficiencies and increase taxation with the final ruin of the treasury as the ultimate result, we denounce the late Republican legislature for its cowardly and hypocritical alliance, through intrigue with the Republican board of public works and the Republican attorney general in a scheme whereby millions of dollars' worth of property of the state is to be transferred to corporations interested in creating a monopoly of transportation without the state or the people thereof reserving any benefit to them

We demand the fullest safeguards for the ballot box, the punishment of all who seek to corrupt it and the enactment of a law making it a felony for corporations capitalists employers to intimidate or attempt to control the political action of their employes We favor home rule in the management of and control of municipal affairs, and denounce the partisan acts passed by the late Republican Legislature to subserve the interests of scheming politicians and we demand the repeal of all laws which deprive the electors of the exercise of their constitutional privileges

The commercial and industrial interests of the state require that equal use of all transportation facilities be secured to all on equal terms and we demand that favoritism by common carriers, and the employment of corporate franchises to foster monopolies oppress the people is prohibited by law and that pools combinations trusts or conspiracies to corner or forestall the market, and to crush free competition, be suppressed by legislation We declare in favor of a proper regulation of the liquor traffic and believe it to be the duty of all good citizens to aid in reducing to a minimum the evils resulting therefrom and to this end favor the submission of an amendment to the constitution providing for the license of such traffic."

The first clause of the above was hailed with deafening cheers Nearly every clause was cheered to the echo

Mr White stated at the conclusion of the above that it was adopted unanimously with the exception of four members who objected to the last clause. The platform as a whole was adopted without dissent.

The platform being disposed of, President Seney called for the nomination of candidates for governor Mr James F Neal, of Hamilton, named James I Campbell

Charles W Baker, of Cincinnati, nominated Powell and made a very good impression by his eloquent speech, although it was confined principally to denouncing the Republican party

Mr Hoisey, of Cleveland, the eagle of Cuyahoga, named M A Foran, in an earnest and well received speech.

Isaac M Jordon seconded the nomination of Campbell

Boston Young, of Marion county, made a speech in the interest of Powell, and this wound up the speeches and balloting began. The first ballot resulted as follows Campbell 251 Powell, 391, Foran, 86

The second ballot resulted in the nomination of Powell by the following vote Campbell 251 Powell, 591 2, Foran, 86

On motion of Mr Neal the nomination of Powell was made unanimous. A committee consisting of C W Baker, James F Neal and E M Heisley, was appointed to await on Powell and to escort him to the hall

Names being in order for lieutenant governor, Lawrence, of Cuyahoga, named D L Wadsworth, of Wellington Frank Koch, of Cincinnati, named John McBride

J H Phelps of Ravenna, named D C. Cochran

John McBride withdrew his name

Elmer White named Judge George P Tyler, of Brown county

O L Young, of Massillon, seconded Cochran's nomination

Gen Linsay second d the nomination of Tyler

The ballot for lieutenant governor resulted as follow Wadsworth, 914 2, Cochran, 511 1 2, Tyler, 25,

Previous to the completion of the ballot, Powell appeared and was royally welcomed His partisan glowing tribute to both Cleveland and Senator Payne, comparing the former to President Jackson

After the first ballot Coolman was nominated by acclamation This was followed by the nomination of Lyman R Critchfield, in the same manner, for supreme judge for the long term

The nominees for supreme judges, short term were John S Leedom of Champaign, and Virgil P Kline, of Cleveland The ballot resulted in the selection, by the vote Leedom 321 Kline, 441

Emil K Sewitter was nominated for state auditor by acclamation but it aroused its content, Logan of Columbia, appealing from the decision of the chair A vote was taken on the appeal, and the roll of counties called as to whether the decision of the chair should be sustained on the decision that Kieswetter was really nominated

Kieswetter took the stand and demanded in the interest of fair play that there be an open ballot and each candidate if there be any beside himself, be balloted for This suggestion soothed the troubled waters Joseph G Carley, of Champaign county was placed in nomination and the balloting began

It was a walk over for Kieswetter The ballot resulted Kieswetter, 569, Carley, 81

George W Harper, of Greene county, was nominated for treasurer of state by acclamation

William H Teet, of Ottawa county, was nominated for attorney general by acclamation

The candidates for board of public works were A H Miller, of Medina county, Adam Bodrey, of Butler, afterward withdrawn C L Addison, of Muskingum, and Edward Clark, of Mercer

The vote on state board of public works resulted Miller, 19, Addison, 96, Murphy, 57 Clark, 49 No nomination

Clark and Miller withdrew and M J Murphy of Lima was placed in the field The second ballot was as follows Murphy, 91, Addison 97

Col Vance proposed a vote of thanks to the city of Cleveland for the hospitable manner in which it had treated the visitors. It was carried with a hurrah

The convention then adjourned sine die

VALE GEN. BOULANGER.

HE FAILED TO GRASP HIS OPPORTUNITY, AND IT HAS FLED.

The Mercurial French Mind Deserts Its Erstwhile Idol, and the Cry Now is Vive La Republique—Comments of the Paris Press on the Subject—Foreign News.

PARIS, July 22—The Boulanger party no longer exists, even if it ever existed. For eighteen months Gen Boulanger undoubtedly personified the patriotic side of French feeling, but his popularity has come down by the run The raging and bobtail demonstration at the Garde Lyons muzzled it. The victory of sound common sense in the chamber July 11 stabbed it. The grand and dignified attitude of the French on the day of their national fete killed it.

France to day wants no war like spouter, no military idol, no Caesar On this, all Frenchmen, whether Royalists, Imperialists, Republicans or Radicals, are firmly resolved Gen Boulanger is merely a gallant officer, who has been absurdly puffed by injudicious friends. His backers, Clemenceau, Rochefort, Deroulede and company, pushed their man too far to the front, and even the Radicals have now thrown their Boulanger overboard

La Justice, Clemenceau's paper, says that the population of Paris has proved its wisdom by not allowing itself to tarnish an ovation to republican principles by an outbreak in favor of a private individual

La Republique Francais says that Gen Boulanger is an able, energetic general but it is a pity that he ever allowed politics to run away with him Gen Boulanger has proved himself a splendid war minister—the most energetic one, in fact, since Carnot—but he is no statesman

The Conservative Debats says that the man whose influence acted as a provocation to premature war has now sunk below the political horizon

The Republican Temps says that Gen Boulanger's political collapse distinctly strengthens the republic.

D'Autorite, the organ of that oracle of Imperialism, Paul Cassagnac, ridicules the generals letters and telegrams from Clermont-Ferrand, and warmly defends the government against the charge of having tampered with private telegrams between Gen Boulanger's adjutants and Paris

The reactionary Figaro every day pours avalanches of ridicule upon the ex-minister of war and calls him le General des Malfaitons to day its managing editor, M Francis Magnard, gives the key to the situation in the following words "France insists upon one thing only That is, the republic France wants neither prescription nor violence, nor exceptional laws, nor any other humbugs inscribed by the name of progress So long as the republican form of government is left untouched France is satisfied—politically speaking, at least, for, from an economical point of view, much must still be tried It is perfectly clear at present that nobody dreams of upsetting the Republic The Comte de Paris does not wish to risk any adventures, nor irritate the nation any more than the Comte de Chambord did Never was the idea of a truce between all moderate parties opportune Never was it clearer that the policy of violence has not succeeded financially or politically, at home or abroad"

UNJUST FREIGHT RATES.

WHOLESALE GROCERS OF ST LOUIS BEFORE THE COMMISSIONERS

The Missouri Pacific the Railroad Complained of—Other Complaints Before the Commissioners — Kansas Land Grant Railroads—Washington Affairs.

WASHINGTON, July 22—A delegation, representing the Associated Wholesale Grocers of St Louis, and a number of Missouri Pacific railway officials, had a hearing before the interstate commerce commission yesterday The case is the complaint of the St Louis grocers against the railroad company, alleging unjust freight charges on St Louis merchandise, especially upon grocery shipments in small quantities as compared with the freight rates upon the same articles between the same points when in car load lots

Mr J K Hayward, chairman of the grocers delegation conducted their case, and the Missouri Pacific was represented by its counsel, Mr John S Blair Mr Hayward read the charges against the road Mr Blair admitted that in some cases less rates were charged for carload lots than for smaller quantities, but denied that there was in this any unjust discrimination or violation of law

After hearing the testimony of Mr Newman, general traffic manager of the Missouri who explained the bases upon which the different and through rates were made, the commission adjourned for the day

Just before adjournment Mr F B Thurber representing the New York board of trade and transportation, read a brief statement bearing on the subject involved in this controversy Mr Thurber said the question presented was much broader than locally presented by the St Louis people on traffic west of St Louis The trunk line classification, since the enactment of the interstate law, largely increases the number of articles upon which differential rates are imposed when shipped in less than carloads Substantially the discriminations are thus made in favor of shippers which were formerly made by means of rebates and drawbacks, which the interstate commerce law was designed to prevent The circumstances are greatly aggravated over those complained of at St Louis More than half of the cars of the trunk lines go west empty and no cause exists for such discrimination He asked that the question be not decided until the commission shall have had time to hear and consider it in all its bearings It touched the very foundation of rate making principles and it would be better to postpone its decision until autumn rather than decide hastily He filed very comprehensive printed petitions upon the subject

A complaint from the New York board of trade and transportation against the trunk lines will be filed with the commission in a few days

Mr T L Greene, manager of the Merchants' Freight bureau of New York city, and representing a large number of retail grocers in Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and Michigan, also joined Mr Thurber in urging the commission to investigate this matter thoroughly In behalf of the organization he represents he files a petition, in which it is asserted unequivocally that "undue preferences in freight rates given to shippers of carload lots, and withheld from shippers of less quantity, are now embodied in the tariffs and schedules, not only of the Missouri Pacific railroad, as shown in the complaint of classification before you, but also in the tariffs and schedules of other railroads, and especially of those railroads known as trunk lines, embraced in the territory extending from the seaboard to the Mississippi river, and north of the Potomac and Ohio rivers"

Hecker & Petrie, coal miners and shippers, of Anderson county, Tennessee, filed a complaint at the interstate commerce headquarters to day against the East Tennessee, Virginia & Georgia Railroad company, the Knoxville & Ohio and the Richmond & Danville railroads alleging that since the 14th of April last, these roads all under one management, have refused to furnish any cars to the petitioners or to allow them to ship any coal over the road. They allege further that Alfred Sully Calvin Brice and other railroad officials have recently purchased coal mines adjoining petitioners mines, and have openly avowed their purpose to crush out all competition with their mines in the coal field and that this iniquitous action of refusing to furnish cars, is done with the intent of crushing out the petitioners and destroying their business They ask for a hearing and investigation of their grievances

Result of the Gartner's Bay Shooting.

WASHINGTON July 22—Captain Bunce, of the Atlanta, has forwarded to the secretary of the navy a detailed report of the officers appointed by him to examine into the homage done the ship by the firing in Gardner's Bay The report shows that window sash and china basins were broken by the violence of the recoil and a large chest was also thrown overboard Captain Parker commenting on the report says the recoil of the firing has been completely disable both the eight inch breech loading gun carriages, and to throw doubt upon the efficiency of the six inch breech loading gun carriages and the three pieces rapid fire gun mounts The arrangements of battery has proven bad Secretary Whitney, with both reports before him to day, commented as follows

"The reports are not very favorable as to the first trial of the guns of the Atlanta but as yet no matters of great moment have turned up for trouble to my mind is this If two rounds of her battery give this result what would a dozen do, and it is that which we are called upon to ascertain She is meant as a fighting ship and must be further tested It is to be remembered that her completion furnishes an opportunity to the department of determining by actual experiment, many matters as to which the department has heretofore been without practical experience It is important that whatever is to be learned from her should be ascertained at once, and although her design has not been followed in the case of the later ships it is important that a full test of her should be had at once She should have a cruise at sea sufficiently long to subject her to trial of all weathers Her battery should be tested by actual firing until its working characteristics are determined and defects, if any, discovered For these purposes a board will be appointed, and the matter settled at the earliest day She was built by my predecessor under the direction of the advisory board"

Kansas Railroad Lands.

WASHINGTON, July 22—Land Commissioner Sparks has completed the adjustment of the grant to the state of Kansas for the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway company under the acts of congress of March 3, 1863 and July 26 1866 The commissioner finds that the company is not entitled to indemnity for lands within its grant limits by reason of prior grants and reservations to the United States by competent authority for the public or other purposes whatever but finds the fact that an excess of 201 81 acres over the amount legally due has been certified and patented for the benefit of the road The company claims indemnity for all losses within its granted limits, no matter how occasioned, and should this claim be allowed, the company would still be entitled to 501 013 acres. The commissioner recommends to Secretary Lamar that legal proceedings be instituted to recover to the government this excess. If this decision be sustained it will control many grants of a like character

American Alien Act.

WASHINGTON, July 23—Attorney General Garland said yesterday when asked what the opinion on the American alien act, attributed to him in a London dispatch, that he had rendered an opinion about two months ago on that subject to the president at his request, but that no information about the matter had ever been given out by him or the department of justice It was learned at the White House that, although the opinion had never been given out for publication, it was not kept a secret, but was given to certain persons who were connected with mining operations, and who were desirous of obtaining the information The president asked for the opinion at their request, and as no restrictions were placed upon them the opinion published in the London dispatch is probably substantially correct.

Mrs Cleveland's Birthday

THE KNIGHTS OF LABOR.

AN ADDRESS SENT OUT TO THE ORDER EVERYWHERE

A Protest Against the Unconstitutional and Arbitrary Methods By Which the Constitution of the Knights of Labor Has Been Altered—Other Labor Notes

WASHINGTON, July 21—A number of prominent influential Knights of Labor, whose names cannot be divulged at present, but who would be readily recognized in the north and east as members in good standing, and among the most and devoted advocates of the labor cause, at a recent conference adopted the following address to the members of the order

"To the Knights of Labor Wherever Found

"GREETING—It is a well known fact that owing to the wide departure of the order from the fundamental principles upon which the Knights of Labor was founded, there has been a large decrease in its membership and it having that unless the general assembly to meet in October at Minneapolis, take measures to re-establish the ascendancy of those principles, there will be still further desertions that will seriously impair, if not destroy, the usefulness of the order, we take this means of protesting against the unconstitutional and arbitrary methods by which the constitution of the Knights of Labor has been altered, its fundamental principles nullified, new offices created, salaries increased, expenditures made, and assessment levied without authority of the members as provided by the constitution, thereby leading to oligarchic rule, and to the dissatisfaction of the conservative advocates of the cause of labor, who had hoped to find in this order a means of checking the irresponsible rule of privileged classes, commonly known as monopolies, and of returning to a form of government resting upon the clearly expressed and recorded will of the majority, seeking, as such majority inevitably will eventually, when allowed its free determination and expression, the good of the whole people, and thereby the rights of the individual,

"We therefore, appeal to the members of the order to instruct their delegates to the general assembly to organize under the old constitution, and to take steps to submit to the members of the order, in such a manner as to satisfy all that a constitutional majority of the members voting have accepted or rejected, each clause, a constitution embodying the following

"First—The executive board to be, as its name indicates, the means of executing the will of the order, to collect, tabulate and publish reports and statistics, and the arbitrations of local and other officers and decisions of courts affecting the whole order, but not to have power to suspend any member or assembly of the order, but only to prefer charges before a court, to be provided for that purpose by the constitution

"Second—The members of the executive board and all officers to be amenable to trial by a court of a disinterested local, district or state assembly, and for the appeal court, that the order may have the effect to enforce obedience from everyone of its members

"Third—To prohibit any officer or member from inflicting his views or opinions on any subject whatever upon the order, except by having them first adopted by a local, district or state assembly, and then published as the opinions of such assembly, and not of the member, thus saving much valuable time both of the officers of the order, and of the assemblies, and conducting to the better transaction of the business of the order heretofore and now sadly neglected

"Fourth—To provide for the retention under proper safe guards, in the local or district assemblies, of all money not needed, for the absolutely necessary expenses of the general officers and their assistants

"Fifth—To recognize the right of local self government, with voluntary and not coerced co operation between the different organizations

"Sixth—To provide for appeals to the vote of the whole order on matters of general interest, or affecting the constitution, and to provide in the same manner to amendments to the constitution

"Seventh—To require itemized statements of receipts and expenditures with vouchers to be submitted by all executive officers or committees at least once a quarter, so that the receipts may be verified and expenditures scrutinized by those whose money has been contributed

"In short, we ask as the only assurance of the continuance of the order, that the principle of the people ruling, and that our representatives serving with strict accountability be recognized, anything else means centralization of power, which is of the essence of monarchy, aristocracy and monopoly and contrary to the ends and aims of the order which was constituted to combat such tendencies A house divided against itself cannot stand He that would be the greatest among us, let him serve, and not attempt to rule"

Some of the most prominent members of several of the largest assemblies were identified with the address, and according to information gathered by the United Press on the subject, the document bids fair to create a great deal of interest in Knights of Labor circles throughout the entire country

Labor Convention

FALL RIVER, Mass, July 21—The second days convention of District 30, Knights of Labor, opened at 10 o'clock in the morning As soon as possible the convention got down to business The matter of the Worcester lockout was the subject of discussion and occupied the greater part of the forenoon The statements heretofore made that the victimized members would not be supported after the lockout had been declared off, as that the responsibility of the bills incurred, would not be assumed by the knights failed

After speeches were made by McNeill Foster, Litchman and James M Neil on the whole matter was referred to the present executive board with full power to settle all debts and expenses incurred in supporting the lock

A big fight is expected over the selection of two delegates to the Minneapolis National convention of the Knights of Labor A majority of the convention while indorsing Mr Powderly, are bitterly opposed to the continuance of Mr Litchman in office, and the fight will be made on that issue Senator Howard and A A Carlton will probably be chosen delegates

A hasty glance over the democratic platform adopted Thursday doesn't reveal anything especially rate except the general make-up of the document Its hearty endorsement of the national administration is hardly sincere, we think, but it could not well have done other ise, on this subject, however, no acts or features were specified The usual stand is taken on tariff reduction, with the demand of the removal of internal revenues, except on liquors, the hated surplus must go Sympathy is expressed for the Irish Home Rule cause and it is apparently very sincere—it ought to be The cause of labor receives a clause that is meant to please, but it can not go far with those thoroughly posted Immigration and the dangers thereof are alluded to rather indistinctly and the importation of contract labor is given a black eye, though existing laws have settled that matter as definitely as it ever will be Foraker's administration is denounced, not because there is anything wrong about it but because such a denunciation is necessary to frame a platform The purity of the ballot is alluded to as a great necessity but the plank on that subject is not so strong as it might be Reference to Cincinnati and Columbus would have been specific and shown sincerity but it was left out The plank on the liquor traffic is a very rotten one that is not even strengthened by a new sphice License is the old gag, because it is impossible and can never be attained—home rule adoption The platform is sufficiently solid for the load it carries, however and will stand for the campaign

Some fellow has worked the cat's paw racket on Phil Lunn and gotten him to sign a card whooping it up to the Star, but we care not. Yes, Bob Kerr was a good man, sufficiently outspoken to say what he meant without dodging behind some individual who could no more write such a card than a toad could write a will We have no regrets over what we have said about Bobby Kerr, if it did not require so much space we might reiterate them The man who makes Phil Lunn talk about "carbuncles on the body politic" is doubtless endeavoring to get a position as a cancer on Kerr's body financial Hence these tears

Artificial clouds were produced in a vineyard at Pagny, on the France-German frontier one night last month for the protection of the vines from frost The signal was given to ignite liquid tar, which had been poured into tin boxes and pieces of solid tar which had been placed in the ground near the vines Large clouds of smoke quickly enveloped the vineyard The fires lasted for about two hours, but the smoke did not clear off till a considerable time after The object of the experiment was completely gained, as not one young shoot was destroyed by the frost

Our own B G Young made the big great speech of the democratic State Convention in seconding the nomination of T J Powell B G is a bigger man than Powell today, too, and is working to the front of the political cranium every year In this connection, without disparagement to either of the above named gentlemen we observe that the able and shining lights of the party are either dropping out or deemed the hope so far lost thus you that they thought it useless to take an interest in convention

A Reader, a republican of course, wants to know how Tom Powell acquired the title of "general" Mr Powell has been accredited that title to a considerable extent but whoever applied it to him stole it from his brother, thinking perhaps that so long as it was in the family no harm would be done Thomas had the honor, however to serve as a private volunteer for five months with the 54th O V I and a like term as private with the 115th O V I

Richwood has tired of local prohibition and her council has repealed the ordinance that ousted the saloons The citizens who were so strong in favor of the ordinance's passage did not have the sand to give it a just trial Six months do not make a sufficient period to correctly judge such a law and no town is likely to be influenced by the action at that place

Sim Donavan, the man who was very vigorously abused for waiting to kill who got Standard oil money for making Payne U S Senator, was Powell's right hand man He has not been forgiven by the old gentleman with the broom for sweeping Augean stables but he is solid with the kids

Tom Powell is a candidate on the order of Cleveland—prior to his candidacy very few people have ever heard of him The worst thing we could say of him is his lack of ability, for really we consider him very small potatoes for the office of Governor of Ohio

Now Tom Powell, who is doubtless a very clever fellow, will beam to hear of what a rascal he is Old Miss Politics is a great lying gossip who is running night and day

THE CRYSTAL PALACE.

NEW YORK'S PRIDE IN 1855 RECALLED BY A DEATH

Christian F Detmold and the Part He Played in the Furtherance of the Enterprise—Picture and Description of the Building—Detmold's Life

The death of Christian L Detmold, who was the superintending architect and engineer of the New York Crystal Palace, has brought out reminiscences of that great enterprise Mr Detmold established himself in New York when quite a young man He was a native of Hanover Germany Although he almost at once established an excellent reputation as a civil engineer, his first great work and the one which brought him into prominence everywhere, was in connection with the American exposition

This enterprise was conceived, no doubt, through the large number of Americans who attended the Crystal Palace exposition in England Mr Detmold took a prominent part in all the agitation which preceded putting the idea of the American exposition in operation, and to him was due almost all the success the ill fated venture attained After the collapse of the exposition Mr Detmold went to Europe, and later made his residence in Paris

Although the American Crystal Palace exposition was the cause at the time of remarkable agitation and discussion of the question in many ways by all the American newspapers, it is a singular fact that very little data is now obtainable about the enterprise In securing a picture of the Crystal Palace, almost every source for obtaining it was exhausted, and when a small book by the architects of the building was obtained, which contained a cut of the palace, the librarian of the New York Mercantile library where it was secured, asked that great care be exercised in handling the book, and that it be returned promptly, as it was considered valuable

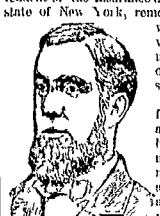
In January, 1853, the authorities of New York city wanted a lease of Reservoir square for the purposes of the American exposition The lease extended for five years, but two conditions were made, that the building should be constructed entirely of iron and glass, and that no single entrance fee should exceed fifty cents In March of the same year the legislature granted a charter for the "Association for the exhibition of the industry of all nations" The inauguration of the palace was on July 14, 1853, when President Pierce delivered an address, and the musical and other exercises were of the most elaborate description

For some time the Crystal Palace was a strong attraction to visitors Theodore Sedgwick was the first president of the association He resigned at the end of the year and was succeeded by P T Barnum, but that gentleman's untiring efforts did not put the association entirely on its feet One of Mr Barnum's most successful moves was a ne inauguration in May, 1854 Henry Ward Beecher and Elihu Burritt were orators and the reinauguration was conducted with great eclat throughout The palace became a mecca of dead property, however, in 1858 On Oct. 6, 1858, the building was totally destroyed by fire There were several thousand people in the palace at the time the fire was discovered, but all escaped unharmed The loss to exhibitors was about $500 000 It is supposed the fire was of incendiary origin

The Late John F Smyth

The death of John F Smyth, ex superintendent of the insurance department of the state of New York, removed a man who was at one time a very prominent figure in the politics of the Empire state

He had long suffered from dropsy and had not left his house for several months This illness culminated in a congestive chill, and in his weak physical condition he was unable to rally He leaves a widow and one son



JOHN F SMYTH

Mr Smyth was born in Glasgow in 1825, and in 1850 he came to this country In 1865, through Mr Cardwell's influence, Mr Smyth was made supervisor of internal revenue for the northern district of New York In 1873 he was appointed postmaster of Albany In 1876 he was elected a member of the Republican State committee, and in 1882 was chairman of that committee In 1847 Mr Smyth was appointed superintendent of the insurance department by Governor Robinson, which position he held about five years

Kansas City's Great Show

Kansas City is going to have a big show this fall By National Agricultural exposition will open early in September, and the contractors are hurrying along the work of getting the great building ready

The structure stands in the middle of a forty acre tract of land about a mile and a half from the city's postoffice and will be easily reached by various transit lines. James Goodwin is president Hamilton S Wicks vice president and secretary, John W Ryckman, manager, and F J W Hart architect of the enterprise The building will possess four entrances and will cover an area of ground 265 by 210 feet in extent It will be of stone brick, iron and glass in construction, and will be two stories in height

KANSAS CITY EXPOSITION BUILDING

The Fine Art Hall will be located in the main tower and also will the dining room and both spectators will be excellently lighted A summer garden will be located on the top of the tower while the basement will be given up to machinery The main floor will be appropriated to agricultural and mineral exhibits

Underneath the towers there is a well lighted up and from it will be issued every day an exposition journal

LIGHT AND AIRY.

His Sonnet

I wrote a sonnet and sent it there—
But as them perused it my jewel
It came from above and its theme was love—
Hath it made thy heart beat purer
Distilled through my soul in every word—
Did they fail to touch thy spirit?
Or am I their first sacrificial lord in my quest,
Do I soon favor inherit?

Yet all of my soul I could not write,
Nor hear but what and I own it
Oh love my life with earth's pettiest part,
Can I the secret ever unwind
But for you each hour is a moment to find more
Than I may tell in this minute

Or I can I for you love make a mistake
Your scorn is this just one ever,
Of course I must your heart ache at me—
That shall all die over
It is best to be plain with a friend,
And speak your mind I am told reason
I've tried this thing, there is best I could do
And failed to find rhyme or reason

Who He Was

He stepped into the dry goods store,
His chin held up in air
He said "This store should not be absent
With prints and comfortables"

He stood official spoke to him
In manner courteous way
And asked him "What is it my friend
You wish to see today?"

"Now who the dickens may you be?"
The youth he made reply
"Why I'm floor walker of this house
What do you wish to buy?"

"I don't want any floors, old man
You're standing in my road"
He pushed the walker to one side
And on he proudly strode

Stop! stop my lad I also am
The proprietor of the store
And the old man seized that fifty youth
And with him stepped the floor

A Woman's Reason

He asked me if I marry him
I was when he ask I that night
With charms of tears his eyes were dim,
But mine were shining bright

He pleaded with me earnestly
Quite eloquent he grew,
While I was wondering if he'd see
I wished that he'd get through

He begged me for one little word
Of hope encouragement,
His eager arguments I heard,
But how could I consent?

I know some girls would envy me,
And most girls he'd be with
But then he'll never do you see,
Because he isn't rich

A Curious Floating Island.

Henry's Lake is one of the wonders of the Rocky mountains Directly on the summit of the continental divide, in a depression or gap called Targee's pass, is a body of water that was given the above name in honor of an old trapper who made his home on its borders for several years in the enjoyment of sweet solitude

Henry's Lake is in oval shape and has an area of forty square miles It is entirely surrounded by what seems to be solid land, and one readily concludes that it has no outlet On the west side however a slow moving which floats on the water, and the hidden outlet is beyond it Near the rim of the basin, which at no distant day must have been the pebbly beach of the lake, is a shallow pool, out from which flows a creek—the source of the north fork of Snake river

A species of blue pontederias of luxuriant growth floats upon the water and sends out a mass of large hollow white roots, which form a mat so thick and firm that a horse can walk with safety over the natural pontoon The decayed vegetation adds to the thickness of the mat and forms a mold in which weeds, willows and small trees take root and grow Back from the new border the new land is firm and supports pine and aspen trees of small growth

An island of the same turf formation floats about the lake The floating body of land is circular and measures 300 feet in diameter A willow thicket thrives in the center, interspersed with small aspens and dwarf pines The little trees catch the breeze and as the suns the earry the island on its orbit One evening it was within a stone's throw of our camp At daylight next morning it was five miles away—Col Sim Francisco Examiner

One of Dumas' Stories

Dumas loved to laugh at the expense of English stiffness and reserve One of his best stories was this One day Victor Hugo and I were invited to dine with the Duke of Devons Among the guests were Lord and Lady Palmerston—of course this happened before the February revolution At midnight tea was handed around Victor Hugo and I were sitting side by side, chatting merrily Lord and Lady Palmerston had arrived very late and their had consequently been no opportunity to introduce us before dinner, afterdinner it seems it was forgotten English custom consequently, did not allow us to be addressed by the illustrious couple All at once young Decazes comes up to us and says "My dear Dumas, Lord Palmerston begs you will leave a chair free between you and Victor Hugo"

I hastened to do as he wished We moved away from each other and placed an empty chair between us Thereupon enters Lord Palmerston, holding the hand of his wife, leads her up to us and invites her to sit down on the empty chair—all this without saying a word 'My lady,' he said to his wife, 'what time have you?' She looked at her watch and answered "Thirty five past twelve" "Well, then," said the great minister, 'remember well that this day, at thirty five minutes past twelve, you were sitting between Alexander Dumas and Victor Hugo, an honor which you probably never will enjoy again in your lifetime" Then he offered his arm again to his wife and took her back to her seat without saying a word to us—because we had not been presented'—Cor Home Journal

Henry Clay and Kossuth

Henry Clay, at the urgent request of Kossuth, granted him an interview at his room at the National hotel on the afternoon of January 9, 1852 Mr Clay had dressed himself, and, perhaps for the last time, stood erect to meet the Magyar He received the visitor with all his characteristic courtesy and cordiality, but said "Governor Kossuth, a dying man stands before you to protest against your doctrine of intervention" Kossuth replied in terms that affected Mr Clay to tears, and both giving way to unrestrained emotion, they parted—to meet not again —Ben Perley Poore's Letter

"Why do you wear your low necked dress to the theatre?" asked a sensible woman of her butterfly sister "To please the men, of course, was the calm reply "And don't you think you would succeed better" said the other, "if you removed your hat instead of your waist?"—The Judge.

Brass Signs and Door Plates.

New ways of making a living continue to present themselves The professional brass sign polisher dropped in to solicit a job from me this week He carried his kit under his arm and was willing to contract to keep the brass sign which I might own but do not, dazzling to the eye for a fixed sum per month He looked as if the trade was not a bad one, for he was decently dressed and jingled some money in his pocket I saw him next day busy on a store front where there are seven signs and noticed that he worked quite expeditiously and effectively As brass signs furnish ever night and are as numerous as wooden ones once were here, I should not be astonished if my visitor died a millionaire

Speaking of brass signs, how completely the door plate has gone out of fashion When I came to New York to work for a living a door plate was as essential an insignia of gentility as a bank account, and shops where they were sold were to be found everywhere On the residence streets of the better class at a certain hour every morning you would see a servant on every stoop polishing the plate up before its owner had his breakfast The door plate was with us what the marble front step is to the Philadelphian Philadelphia's front step, no there yet Our door plates have become things of the past, found only on old fashioned houses without pretensions to style Their places have probably been taken by the coats of arms which fashionable New York now pays a clever Frenchman to invent or borrow for it—Alfred Trumble in New York News

He Wanted to Say.

"I came in here a few weeks ago," said a stranger to the proprietor of a place on Michigan avenue, "to buy some candy, and a cross eyed woman with a stack up nose"—

"That woman, sir, was my wife," replied the proprietor as he moved along the counter

"Ah! Excuse me! But there was a girl here She was a tall, slab sided young woman with red hair, and had freckles all over"—

"That was my daughter, sir, and how dare you talk that way?"

"Oh, it was! Beg your pardon, sir—beg a dozen pardons The boy that waited on me had a mouth as big as a pumpkin pie, and I don't believe he knew enough to last him over"—

"That was my son, sir! Have you come in here to deliberately insult my family?" shouted the proprietor,

"Your son eh? Beg more pardons—lots of pardons What I wanted to say was"—

"You get out! You came here to give me a bit about an old man with dyed whiskers who had married his third wife and walked with a game leg, and I won't stand it! Go right out or I'll do you mortal injury inside of a minute"—Detroit Free Press

The Fascinating Gypsy Woman

I marvel if there exists another of human kind so wise in all unwisdom, so knowing in all that beclouds others, so cunning in all that is valueless to the world, so adept in all that bewilders the ignorant, so keen in all that blunts and dulls those that yield to her spells, so fascinating in all that which, sorted and sifted for human service, is so utterly trivial and unwhole some In contemplating the gypsy woman through years of study, I have never been able to get away from the notion of her likeness to a splendid wild animal a leopard or a tigress, trained to matchless docmuleness and humility by some Hindoo magician, still under the lash of the black art master, capable of strangest attraction in wondrous eyes and supple movement, and possessing a charm of mystery, of power, of suppressed ferocity and a deadly fascination which magically sways and holds in such subtle way as can only be felt, and can never be told Thing of the night and mystery she certainly is Human, as we weigh humanity, she is not—Edgar L Wakeman's Letter

The "Buckeye" and the "Papaw"

LIFE IN THE SADDLE.

SOMETHING ABOUT THE WAY PEOPLE RIDE.

Horseback Exercise Almost a Thing, of the Past in the East and North, While It is Still Very Common in the South and West

If you are in eastern man you will be surprised should you make a trip west or south, by the number of men and women you will see on horseback If you reside south or west, and you travel north or east, you will be struck by the fact that few people are to be seen in the saddle

And when you have taken note of the facts you will ask "Why?"

The answer to your short question is a complex one

QUITE ENGLISH, YOU KNOW

In the east the country roads are everywhere filled for the light buggy One can go to town or to church and run less danger of spoiling his Sunday clothes than if mounted The young lover can sit close beside his sweetheart in buggy, and he can't fall by gravity out of it There is much more attraction over trotting matches than running races in the east and horse-racing, therefore, is left to those driving and not running quadrupeds Those who want the excuse of riding say that the paved roads are better suited for the horse—that he is eaten doesn't cost so much and does not fly as dust

In the west and south there is many a bridle path where one could not drive in a buggy Cantering is the favorite method of spending hours The bicycle is still something of a novelty

WESTERN STYLE

But there is some horseback riding east, and there are plenty of buggies south and west And while riding is path slowly but none the less certainly declining west and south it is assuredly coming into favor again there

But it is only the well to do—in the cities, he wealth—who can afford horseback exercise and the young man in western city who would keep a horse solely for saddle use would be hooted to find the wherewith to pay his butcher and baker and the gas man And if he keep a horse for business purposes he will drive him, of course, and a less that is stylishly driven is rather to be ridden

The English to ride" however, and so all wealthy in the cities ride Hunt clubs are organized, and fine foxes are chased with hounds and horses An effort for hunting and all like similar diversion is less common and less maternally wealthy regions than the Theres never more than one fox, and as a fern one conclusion that he will be caught that's providing he can be got to run for the foxes fast are chased in the same manner animals that are fed for months previous to the "meet"

IN THE PARK

The great fall among eastern swells who ride are riders in the English method It involves the man in the saddle of the rider at the stop of the horse And if the rider can "saw his bight" between himself and the horse he is considered "quite English" Whether the "English" rider is as graceful as his western brother is a question And the newspapers of New York and Boston are quick with alarm that just as they have learned to spring upon their toes at just the proper moment at the Prince of Wales and his set dismount and of course all the touches of English have fallen to admiring the western style of riding close to the horse practiced by Buffalo Bill and his Wild West troupe

But we shouldn't enviable horseback riding, no matter why the rider rides, for it's a glorious use, and there's no prettier picture in the world than a young gallant and his "fare lady" out riding "in the park," that is, if they know how to ride

His Title to the Land.

A friend of mine Hugh Craig, a graduate of Oxford told me a story once, which I have since seen in The Overland Monthly regarding a claim to a title

At a land court a middle aged Maori appeared and made a long speech giving the reason why a title of a certain piece of land should be given to him An old, grizzled Maori had listened without saying a word At last, as the younger man was about finishing his speech, he inquired

"Where are my arms to be buried, but in this land where I was born?

When he heard the old man exclaimed slowly arose, and knowing of everything but a waistcloth, he bounded across the room and addressed the court, saying

"I have been with the dust and contempt to the words of this tutuna (nobody) What claim can he have on this land? I conquered long ago he people and lived on that land when he was a small child, and the mistake I then made was in permitting him to live! And he asks Where are his ancestors buried? I tell him and show him Here! here —lifting his stomach with his left hand "His ancestors are here I ate them and that is my title to the land!"

No better or stronger title to native land can be brought before the native land courts than the above described "Title by Digestion"—Brooklyn News

They Went Back and Lied.

Said Buffalo Bill to an American who saw him recently in London

"Before I got into the show business, as you must have suspected I conducted—that's the word now—I got many parties of noble young Englishmen all through the Black Hills, the Yellowstone country, the Little Missouri and Little Big Horn countries Well, they were mostly quiet, good natured fellows, that kept no shooting to get skins, antlers and such like for them, and I pride myself on keeping them out of trouble with Indians and gin fights and such I find those quiet chaps have no one home and figured as heroes of every kind of scrimmage, every skin was the natural result of a stack of lies, and every hom is long with a dime novel of the most sensational kind And I'm ex pected by all to add and add more gory particulars Is you have whenever frontiersman, but I don't What, cast an wholesale lies? "Well, this way," said Bill with a faint blush, "it's mostly a young gal with long eyes who does lead to, that asks me and I can't get it in me to take her vision away from her and then," he added in a discouraged way, "it's all gone to help the show"—D Kotta Bell

"So it is, gents," replied Bumbles, the host, for it was he, "so it is, above the level of the Dead Sea. That's nigh about 1,400 feet lower than the bottom of the ocean, I reckon" And when the tourists thought upon their homes in the Catskills which they had abandoned in search of summer board, they lifted up their voices and wept when upon Bumbles charged them extra his fare for expressing emotion And it was so

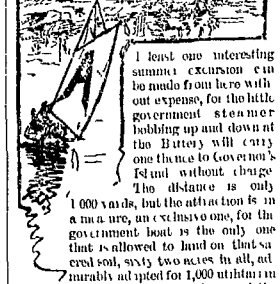
GOVERNOR'S ISLAND.

THE SEAT OF THE MILITARY AUTHORITIES OF NEW YORK

A Visit Paid to Castle William, the Humble Down Fort on the Isle—Military Prisoners Who Have Committed Small Offenses Reference of Soldiers

[Special Correspondence]

NEW YORK, July 11



At least one interesting summer excursion can be made from here without expense, for the little government steamer bobbing up and down at the Battery will carry one thence to Governor's Island without charge The distance is only 1,000 yards, but the attraction is a mammoth one, for the government boat is the only one that is allowed to land on that sacred soil, sixty two acres in all, admirably adapted for 1,000 utilitarian purposes, but now devoted to the use of the military department of the Atlantic and of the New York recruiting station, useless and dismounted cannon, shot, powder, etc, to keeping up a dilapidated and useless fort and an alleged castle on the northwest, which as seen from passing boats seems formidable indeed, but which on investigation shows to be a rickety and tumble down affair which any modern mischief could raze in short order Castle William is a standing monument to the man who invented the word "bluff"

Fort Columbus is a more formidable work at the center of the island, occupied by about 100 men, two batteries of artillery, who "play soldier" to their hearts content That to be stationed on Governor's Island is the dream of half the military men of the country is evidence that the surroundings are pleasant and the duties light, but that the military station which commands the port of the metropolis is not a more formidable defense and less beautiful play ground will be the first cause of wonderment to the tourist visiting the spot

But everything is beautiful, even the short ride in the bobbing, little steamer is delightful, affording a glorious view of shipping, water front, the great bridge and the spires and towers of the surrounding cities Near the landing are imposing piles of ball and shot, black and suggestive rows of dismounted guns, sentries pacing back and forth about the buildings in bright uniforms Governor Cleveland's residence is the most conspicuous of several buildings on the left, almost shut from view by the mass of vines, shrubbery and trees about it.

Paved and shaded roadways lead through the grounds The bustle of commerce has nothing to represent it, nor is there anything to suggest a place frequented by pleasure seekers Only the troopers wandering in the little steamer with me, and five or six went with me on the return trip, several of them ladies who live in the city the occasional soldiers or bandmen one meets look curiously on the visitor and seem to like to gossip if not in view of comrades, but are reticent in the extreme if on duty or in squads. At the grim old castle a sentry paces back and forth before the door

"Can one go in?" I asked

"Only to the door"

"Are military offenders confined within?"

"Yes."

"How many?"

"I don't know"

"What are their offenses?"

"I don't know"

We were allowed a peep at the crumbling old amphitheatre within, a queer old rookery, with galleries around it from which the prisoners enter their cells So far as I can learn the present prisoners are only minor offenders—serving out terms for drunkenness desertion, etc Eleven or twelve thousand Confederate prisoners were kept here at one time when the rebellion was in progress. It must have been an odious pen for, although the sun streams down into the amphitheatre and the air is good within the walls, yet it is hard to surmise where so many men could be decently lived

In the moat of Fort Columbus several prisoners were mowing down the luxuriant grass under armed guards who were badgering each other and laughing heartily as we approached, but who separated at once as I walked up to the party and were at once intently engaged in the laudable work of watching every movement of their charges Not to be put off I remarked one of them

"Are these men prisoners?" I asked

"Yes"

"For any serious offense?"

"No"

"What did they do?"

"I don't know"

"Would they try to escape if you were to leave them?"

"No"

"You are sure they wouldn't?"

"Yes"

"Then why do you guard them?"

The fellow's eyes didn't twinkle a bit as he said "I don't know," and moved off

Gen Schofield's house has a wide piazza in front, approached by stairs The door was partially ajar, showing part of a wide, hospitable hall, with oiled floor and tiger skin rug There is no bell, and I

COMMANDER'S HOUSE

knocked vigorously without response, then pounded—still no response—finally stepping with my cane A girl on the lawn telling me was then started on the run, calling vociferously to a second girl within the house, who finally conducted us to the general in a cheerful room in the left wing Gen Schofield is apparently informal and courtly, rubicund, stout, with gray hair and white side whiskers "We could have carried away all your possessions," I said, when he incidentally spoke of the delay "They would not have made you wealthy," he replied

The general chatted easily about various things, but did not desire to say anything exhaustive about military offenders and their punishment Ammunition of the reviled statutes would be lost for that.

"All the prisoners here," he said, "have committed minor offenses"

"How many have you?"

"I don't know"

Prisoners here are from any part of the army in this section, the general informed us. The largest military prison is Fort Leaven worth and the third place is at San Francisco, but for crimes soldiers are sent to the penitentiaries

Brooklyn is about the same distance from Governor's Island that New York is, but the former is not favored with any mode of reaching the military stronghold without crossing to New York The Indian name for Governor's Island was Paggonck, afterward called Hutten Island by the early settlers from the huts that were located here by the Dutch colonists In some way it became a plot of ground for the use of the successive governors, hence its present name In 1775 fortifications were begun, but they were of little consequence The British garrisoned the island under Gen Howe Governor Clinton leased it in 1784, and a hotel and race course was built upon it. In 1794 £40 000 was devoted to improving the fortifications, and at one time the students of Columbia college worked in a body on the forthifications. In 1806 Fort Joy was replaced by the present fortification, Fort Columbus In 1811 Castle William was completed That it should be succeeded in turn by something modern and substantial there is no doubt

CLARENCE CHADWICK.

NATHANIEL MACON

A Consistent Just but Almost Forgotten Public Man.

[Special Correspondence]

CHAMPAIGN, Ills, July 12—In the year 1826 Nathaniel Macon attained the age of three score and ten, the limit of manly life, the psalmist tells us At this date Macon was just in the middle of the third senatorial term conferred upon him by the North Carolina legislature, but having long before made a resolution to retire from public life at the age of 70, he very promptly resigned his seat.

To those who urged him to remain till the end of his term, and insisted that his mind was as good as ever, he replied that his mind was good enough to let him know that he must quit office before his merit depowers quit him

When American independence was declared Macon was 18 years of age and a student at Princeton college At this time a body of American troops was doing duty on the Delaware, and Macon joined this force, did duty with it for a season, but ultimately resumed his studies at Princeton

In 1776 the southern states were overrun by the British armies In this emergency Macon returned to North Carolina, joined a military company from his native county and went to South Carolina, then a most active theatre of war He bore his full share in all the hard hips encountered by the south ern army, was at the fall of Fort Moultrie, the surrender of Charleston and the dispersion of the rebel at Camden under the unfortunate Gen Gates. He was with the army in its retreat toward the further borders of North Carolina, and was with it in camp on the left bank of the Yadkin river when the sudden flooding of that stream in the brief interval between the crossing of the Americans and the appearance of the British arrested the pursuit of conquerors and thus gave much needed rest to Greene's men

While in camp here, with only destitution and want in the way of immediate surroundings, Macon received word through the governor of North Carolina that he had been chosen from his native county to a seat in the general assembly then about to convene Macon, however, refused to attend, and this refusal was at once the talk of the camp and very naturally reached Gen Greene's ears. That officer at once sent for Macon and inquired why he had declined to serve his county in the general assembly Macon answered that it so far he had seen only the faces of the enemy, but pretened to remain in the army till their backs could be seen

Gen Greene was very favorably impressed with Macon and at once sought to convince him that it was his duty to attend the general assembly when his familiarity with the constitution and needs of the army would be of the greatest service in getting supplies of all kinds Macon saw the force of Greene's argument and promptly set off to attend the session of the general assembly

In the body he represe ntations of the condition of the American army in the south had much influence in securing for Greene's suffering army the re-enforcement and supplies with which a little later it was enabled to win from Cornwallis the victory of Guilford Court House

Macon closed his military career when he left Greene on my in North Carolina He had served in all three years, all this time in the ranks as he declined promotion Neither would he take commensation for his services And in after years, when the Revolutionary veterans were loaded with pensions, bounties and land warrants, Macon uniformly refused all such emoluments

He was in public life about forty years, and in addition to long service in the North Carolina legislature, served as representative in congress during the administrations of Washington John Adams, Jefferson and part of Madison's term While Madison was yet in the executive chair Macon was transferred to the senate, where he remained during Monroe's incumbency and well on to ward the close of John Quincy Adams' term of office—serving in all fifteen years

While in the house of representatives Macon was for many years its speaker But every place he reached was gained though the suffrages of the people or their immediate representatives He decline I the place of postmaster general under Jefferson, but cheerfully accepted the position of justice of the peace to which the people of his native county elected him

At another period in his life he refused to become a candidate for vice president, but in 1836 took the place of presidential elector on the Van Buren ticket

Politically he was opposed to Alexander Hamilton, but recognizing the honesty, patriotism and ability of the great Federal leader, uniformly refused to sanction or take part in any personal attack on him

Throughout life he was opposed to "long method's security, believing that each individual should bear the ill results of his own doings, as well as reap the rewards of more fortunate ventures In his will he provided that an intimate and valued friend should become his executor, but, while trusted with the largest discretionary powers, he should not be accountable to no count for the manner in which the trust was discharged, as the man's honor was deemed sufficient guarantee

He dressed neatly and always had his clothes made of navy blue cloth of the finest quality Before one suit began to look worn it was replaced by another of exactly the same quality and precisely similar pattern—the latter the style worn during the revolutionary period After resigning from the senate Macon passed nine years of serene contentment, enjoying to the full the sweets of domestic peace at his home in North Carolina.

MARY JANE'S TRAVELS.

WITH DICKEY SHE VISITS THE SUNNY LAND OF FRANCE

What the Two Women Find That is of Interest in a Daylight Journey from Boulogne to Marseilles—Dickey's Observations Recorded

[Special Correspondence]

MARSEILLES, France, June 28—I have heard a great deal about "sunny France" the "vine clad hills," and that sort of poetic slush, and I counted it as so much paid the printer for advertising, but I take it all back now There is a "sunny France" and there are "vine clad hills," and there is every thing that is down on the bills. Perhaps the terrible month of May in London had something to do with making the sunshine of the rose month so delightful in France, I do not know, I do not say I only know that our trip by daylight from Boulogne to Marseilles was such a vacation for a tophi liver that I cannot advise every Englishman or American caught in London in bad weather to try it as we tried it We made the journey in three stages stopping the first night in Paris, the next two in Lyons, and closing at Marseilles

It was our first experience in really foreign land, and we enjoyed it as children enjoy a picnic It was a positive relief to get out of England in every thing in the country is lit with such painful neatness and see once more a plain hedge fence with a gate loose on the hinges, a few stray weeds along the roadside growing in an independent fashion, and a tree now and then, which did not have the appearance of being brought up as a pet The country between Boulogne and Paris is flat and rather uninteresting, except to the stranger who is in France for the first time, and to whom the immemorable blue shirt of the peasant and the tall, monumental shade trees along every roadway are more than forty acres of ancient ruins with history roosting on every handful of dust scattered over them

Speaking of the blue shirted peasant reminds me that in England and France the small farmer or the laborer shows his calling in his clothes to a much greater extent than among the same classes in America With us a sturdy farmer or workingman in his shirt sleeves needs only his coat to make him presentable on the street, but in the old country the apparel of both proclaim the man" his clothes always show what he is

The ready made clothing man has not had hold on the affections of the people he has in our own country, and until he has, class distinctions will be noticeable by even the casual observer

We could see, too, very early in our trip that we had reached a country where the prevailing religion differed from that of England and the "cowled monk" was not an unusual sight at the stations and along the highways approaching the towns

We reached Paris about 5 in the afternoon, and waited nearly half an hour to get our baggage They check baggage in London for Paris and we had ourselves checked (three valises, trunks and small ones to European travelers) in order to have the custom officials examine them at Paris instead of at Boulogne, where time was limited We had them checked again later for Lyons by paying a penny, but my advice is not to do it for the sea foreigners are the slowest creatures imaginable, and when the traveler can't speak the language baggage examination is a delusion and a snare. No nation on earth but our own has yet acquired the art of making travel a pleasure We slept in Paris, and the next evening were in Lyons after a beautiful day's ride along pretty streams, green valleys and among quaint old towns

The next morning before starting out to see the town I interviewed Dickey

"Dickey," said I, "what do you know about Lyons?"

"Oh," said she, "I know all about it I've got a splendid Lyons silk umbrella and a Lyons velvet dress that cost $8 a yard in the place"

"But that isn't history," said I

"But it is fact" and she, "which all history isn't They are the genuine article, too, for the handsome clerk in the store told me so, and that Lyons was famous the world over for its silk and velvet manufacture"

Further conversation developed no more valuable information and I concluded that Dickey must be like some other American girls I knew, and I didn't press my inquiries

However, Lyons has a history and much of it is stained with blood It was here that the guillotine, the most approved and rapid instrument of decapitation, was found too slow by the revolutionary leaders of 1791, so they gave it up and went to shooting and drowning the obstacles of their vengeance I have seen several guillotines, one of which had cut off 29,000 heads, so the guide said, and I think I should prefer shooting or drowning, though I don't suppose it would make very much difference half an hour after either operation were completed

There's a new Lyons and an old Lyons, and in old Lyons I never had seen so many narrow streets and high houses They looked like Rocky mountain canyons with windows in them We ran around everywhere, and finally adjourned to the heights of Fourviere, where there is a great church and a great view We went into the chapel and it looked like a picture shop, for this is a place where pilgrims come by millions and each one seems to have left a white tablet or a small memorial picture On the hillside below the church is a garden filled with shrines, and at one I saw a sight which caused reflection In a recess were life size figures of Christ and Mary, and between them stood a gardener with a broom in his hand Kneeling at the entrance was a plainly dressed man, and as I watched the group it was difficult to say whether the animate or inanimate figures within were receiving the worship of the kneeler In my event the gardener and his broom occupied the most conspicuous position and seemed proud of it.

"Why don't they put up the sign 'Closed for repairs'" said Dickey, "or throw the garden over the fence?"

"Don't talk so," said I, "it's none of our business He poor man on his knees means all right, and if the spiritual and temporal are brought into rather unusual relations it is not his fault."

We found Lyons a pleasant city, with a pretty girl at our hotel who spoke English quite well, and we should like to have seen more of it—churches, museums, Hotel de Ville, quais, rivers and so on—but we had to get away, and we did it regretfully

The next afternoon found us in Marseilles, the "City of the Sycamores" I should call it, for its streets are lined with them, in many instances forming a long continued archway from curb to curb In this respect I believe Marseilles stands first rank among all the cities of the world Its drives are magnificent, the Corniche, along the Mediterranean being the most beautiful The Prado is another, lined with four rows of large sycamores and as smooth as a floor I have seen nothing that can approach it, but when we come to think of it Marseilles has been a city for 2,500 years there is less cause for wonder at her beauty.

"Her beauty!" said Dickey, as I read this to her.

"That will do I have written," said I

"Change the gender of that possessive pronoun, said she

"What's the matter with it?" said I

Age doesn't improve the beauty of anything of the feminine gender," said she

"I look at me," said I, sarcastically

"That's what I was looking at," said she; but I made no change, for Marseilles is beautiful and she is old

There is not much to interest the ordinary traveler in Marseilles but, to me, nothing ever so fascinated me as did the Chateau d'If, made famous by Dumas in his "Monte Cristo" It is on a little island, three and a from shore, and is untenanted save by the keeper and his family The old man has been there forty seven years, he told us, and prisoners have been immured within its heavy walls during his incumbency It is time worn and rusty, and the ivy was a charm about it I could not resist We were in the cell from which the abbe dug into the cell of Edmund Dantes now closed by government orders, an another, the "Man in the Iron Mask," whom no man knows, long a prisoner, here Meantime, by a little window, wrote as day after day dragged wearily along here Philip Egalite suffered for his duplicity, and on the moldy walls the prisoners had written their names and carved figures in the dull and dreadful hours, their names were everywhere, but I knew none save two scratched into the plaster "John Smith Skaneateles, N Y." No date, no other legend but that, and the world is left to wonder what John had ever done that he should be shut in for his negative What tears the dear ones at his quiet home in Skaneateles have shed over his absence! What waiting and wishing, for his return! What days and nights have the returning train passed by those dungeon bars and left John Smith of Skaneateles N Y, no other boon save memory and writing on his wall I did not ask the aged guide at our Mr Smith What need of that? It was enough to know that he had written there, and I did not care to have the melancholy hand destroy the fame I had wrought I wrote my name beside his so that some succeeding traveler might weave about the two a newer romance of the Chateau d'If

We climbed the hill to the church of Notre Dame de la Garde and high above the town, overlooking, the red roofed buildings stretching beyond its environs, and encompassing the lofty summits of the Maritime Alps, which hedge the city and the undulating plain

We go from Marseilles to morrow We shall never see it again perhaps, but its beauty will always be a pleasant memory as its bad smells and filthy alleys, in the poor quarter, will always be an explanation why, whenever cholera touches the Mediterranean coast, it can get a whole handful of Marseilles, when it can't move than a get a pinch of any other city in the district.

MARY JANE

A STRANGER IN GOTHAM

Interview with a Man Who Makes Improvement of the Memory a Specialty

[Special Correspondence.]

NEW YORK, July 11—The third or fourth story, front, of an imposing building on Fifth avenue, near its junction with Broadway, bears a sign sure to attract attention from the street It is in black and white, extends across a window, and aside from a "professor's" name in six large capitals the word "Memory" Curiosity impelled me to ascend the winding stairways which led to the office to which the window and its sign belong A pretty girl sprang up from manipulation of a typewriter in an outer office as I entered, and when I asked for the professor stepped into the inner room, where I was soon invited

A stout man with a big head, partly bald, and a gray mustache, sat in this apartment tearing open letters from a pile before him I asked an explanation of his peculiar sign

"There is little to explain about it," he said, "except that I teach people to remember anything they want to remember With the co operation of any pupil one can have just as good a memory as he may desire to have"

"How long does it take to learn, professor?"

"The course consists of five lessons, which may be given by mail fully as well as in person"

"And how long are the lessons?"

"That depends on the pupil, of course, the average is about three hours, I think Much of my teaching is done in classes by a series of lectures I have lectured to a class of 200 at Yale college, 400 at the University of Pennsylvania, 100 Columbia law students, 900 lady students of Wellesley college and many others in this country In England I have been even more prominently identified with educational institutions."

"How long have you been in this business?"

"About twenty five years, most of the time abroad I still have a branch in London, and in fact, have been in this country only about a year I was induced to come here by my American pupils"

"There are two stages of memory," the little man said to me—"receptive power and revival of impressions My system is to increase each of these so you remember because you can't help yourself Concentration is the cardinal feature of the system, and the first thing is to strengthen the power of attention so you hold your mind on any subject without wandering Our natural mem ories are broken down by learning things by rote"

The professor gave me a pamphlet profusely with caps, italics and boldface lines from which I learn that he also teaches "whist memory" and the art of illustration, or how to find appropriate anecdotes, adages, formulas, etc Among the gentleman's pupils have been Judah P Benjamin, W W Astor, Dr Buckley and Mark Twain This year the professor is to lecture before the Chautauqua (N Y) university.

The new magazine, The Cosmopolitan, originally launched at Rochester, N Y, has been moved here and seems destined for success Hamilton Is Frank P Smith, until his connection with The Cosmopolitan an editorial writer on The Democrat and Chronicle at Rochester The success of this new magazine is due almost entirely to the delicate yet virile personality of Mr Smith, I think He is tall and slender, with an oval face and abundant coal black hair, carelessly brushed across his forehead A black mustache curls around the corners of his mouth and his nose supports light steel framed glasses He is a close student, and is somewhat reserved to strangers.

The advertising rates of the New York daily papers strike terror to the hearts of out of town advertisers I made a tour of several of the offices and asked for their rate cards For reading notices The World charges $2 50 a line on its first page, $1 50 and $1 on other pages, for the Sunday paper, $4, $2, $1 50 and $1, the notices to be "starred" or marked advt For the same thing The Sun charges $2 50 on first page, $1 50 on third page The Times rate is $2 for first page, on a column is quoted at $1.20 each insertion Advertisements for help, etc, The Times make at five cents to ten cents per line For agate notices preceding marriages and deaths The Tribune has $1 per agate line, $3 preceding markets For "wants" The World charges twenty to twenty five cents per line, five cents extra on Sunday All the papers charge double price for display type, electros, and quadruple rate for double columns. Births, marriages and deaths are $4 50 in The Times, twenty five cents per line in The World, five cents extra Sundays, $1 in The Tribune.

It is stated that thirty-three missionary societies now have workers in Africa. The dark continent is encompassed on every side and, like the divisions of an invading army, these missionaries are moving toward the center, and closing in upon the last strongholds of heathenism and the slave trade. Hundreds of natives in the seminaries are preparing to labor as preachers or teachers, and thousands of children are receiving Christian instruction. It is said that the scriptures have been translated, in whole or in part, into thirty-six of the dialects of Africa, while the whole Bible has been rendered into eleven languages, spoken by multitudes of natives.

Everybody is glad that President Cleveland escaped unhurt from a recent railroad accident. The American people are the most discriminate in the world, and they would one and all undergo the greatest personal danger to save from personal injury any one of their fellow-citizens. They can strike hard blows politically, and especially in defense of the honor of their veteran soldiers, but personally they wish nothing but good luck and good fortune to any man.—Journal.

The Marion county republicans passed a resolution in favor of Ohio endorsing Sherman's candidacy, but it was a tie vote and the chairman had to decide it. He who reads the signs of the times must readily conclude that Ohio is for Blaine, for even those who earnestly support the Mansfield statesman in the stand he has taken, are more attached to Blaine. There is no such thing as a solid Sherman delegation from Ohio next year unless Mr. Blaine withdraws from the race.

A new version of the law closing saloons on election day has been made by a Cleveland Judge to the effect that the drinking places must close for twenty-four hours, which will neither allow them to open during the day or the night after an election. They have always been allowed to open when the polls close, but if it is the meaning of the law to keep them closed that night also a new state of affairs will exist hereafter. The matter will be tested in the Supreme court.

Hundreds who tried the 150 degrees proof Illuminating kerosene oil manufactured by the Eagle Consolidated Refinery, of this city, from Lima crude, unite in testifying that they could not find the least difference between the refined oil from Lima crude and the best Pennsylvania product. Deeds speak louder than words, and the success of the Lima oil as an illuminant shows that the field has been unjustly libelled.—Lima Republican.

The Gallipolis Daily Sun has ended its existence after six weeks of uncertain life. The report that announces its suspension says that people there know each other's business without the medium of a daily paper. That is a startling truth no doubt to many, but the truth is applicable to scores of towns just like Marion. A daily paper is needed to disseminate legitimate news, however, for that is something that the disseminators of carrion do not deal in.

The New York Commercial Advertiser publishes a statement to the effect that within fourteen months the membership of the Knights of Labor has decreased from one million to less than six hundred thousand. The reasons for the decrease, according to returns to the same paper, appear to be that the working of the order is too autocratic for American freemen, who are returning to the more democratic unions.

One of the recent additions to the Florida statute-book makes it unlawful for any railroad official to give a free pass to any salaried officer of the State or member of the State Legislature. The receiving of such a pass by any such officer or legislator is also made unlawful, and the maximum penalty for a violation of the act on either side is fixed at a fine of $1,000, or a year in the county jail, or both.

The U. S. Supreme court has summoned Mrs. Laughry to appear in its august presence in person in order to perfect her citizenship. The Justices evidently do not object to the very beautiful client appearing herself. Though their dignity is never forgotten they have the same curiosity as ordinary men.

Aldrich Marion county democrats were considerably interested in what the state convention will do, they are doubly anxious over the outcome of the county convention. When so many are on the anxious seat there are necessarily a large number of crushed ones.

There is a possibility of a chance that the Sandwich Islands will prove at last to be a bone of contention between the United States and Great Britian. There are too many mixed up war vessels lying around there for safety and good-fellowship.

SOME CURIOUS THINGS.

The Japanese make cheese from beans and peas.

Perry, Shiawassee county, Mich., has not a single dry goods store.

A Kansas man measures seven feet three and a half inches in height.

An unknown man attempted to steal a lightning rod from a house at Gainsville, Tex.

The editor of The Plum Creek (Neb.) Gazette has but one arm and one leg, and has just broken the arm.

Milledgeville, Ga., has a negro turning white. She has been the possessor of the tallest young man in Georgia.

In digging wells in Kimball, Neb., a fossil stratum is encountered, and quite interesting specimens have been dug up at a depth of from forty five to fifty feet.

The most ordinary sombrero in the city of Mexico costs about $15, while the most expensive ones range in price from $50 to $600. It costs money to be a dude in Mexico.

A mirage has been distinctly seen by several citizens at Perham, Minn. It lasted ten minutes. The picture was Devil's lake, seven miles west. Buildings and farms were recognized.

The losses or poverty of British landlords are attested weekly by frequently ten, sometimes twenty, columns of advertisements in The Times of sales of estates, town mansions and contents, libraries and jewels.

A deacon of Seymour, Ind., has been expelled from the church for declaring his belief that the world is 1,000,000 years old and that it is likely to stand for another million before the judgment day comes

Twenty eight unmarried women reside in Garfield county, Colo; also 1,000 unmarried men All the men can't get a wife from among the twenty-eight, and it probably puzzles the women to make a choice from among the 1,000.

Albion, in Erie county, Pa., has a curiosity in the shape of a clock which stands seven feet high, operated by chains and great weights, the dial bearing old Roman figures, with the entire works made of boxwood and bearings of pure ivory. It is a perfect time keeper and upward of 100 years old.

Workmen digging on North Chark street, Chicago, the other day found a silver coin imbedded in the sand and clay about twenty feet below the surface of the street. It is an Austrian piece, worth about $1, and bears the image and superscription of the Arch duchess Maria Theresa. It was coined in the year 1720, the year of her death

Louisa county, Va., is excited over the alleged fact that after a white handkerchief, which had been folded four thick and laid over the face of a dead woman, had been removed, there were four distinct pictures of the woman, about the size of a 25 cent piece, plainly painted on the cloth Spirits of camphor had been applied to the face before the handkerchief was laid on it

It is said that in Portland, Me., there is a man with a false nose, a glass eye, but three fingers and one thumb, one ear, false teeth, false hair and a cork leg. For all this he is the liveliest man in Portland. He walks ten miles every day, rain or shine. He has had three wives, and survives them all, and has refused five chances to get married again, so he says, since he buried his last wife, about a year ago

Mrs Emma Gephart, of Tuscola, Ill., was preparing to retire and chanced to lift up one of the pillows of the bed, in doing which she disturbed a large blue racer that had coiled itself underneath. Her screams aroused the household, and the intruding reptile was soon dispatched. As a large maple grows near the house, the snake is supposed to have climbed up that and out on its branches to reach her room.

Reuben Fields is a mathematical wonder at Higgonsville, Mo., who doesn't know a letter of the alphabet or one printed figure from another, but who is wonderfully strong on mental calculations, making them off hand. He is 36 years of age. He claims that his gift was given from heaven, and says it came to him suddenly when 8 years old. He guards this instinct with the utmost care, and will not answer questions unless he is paid, fearing that it will be taken from him should he use it to satisfy idle curiosity.

ABOUT CHILDREN.

A boy in Howell, Mich., was fined $20 for locking the doors of the Salvation army, so that the force had to make its exit by means of the window.

The daughter of George W. Clark, of Newport, Ind., is 5 years and 3 months old. She weighs 105¼ pounds, and measures three feet around the waist.

Danbury, Conn., has a 10-year old girl ball player. She is said to catch with perfect ease, grace and accuracy, even the highest fly being captured with rare judgment. She does not throw overhanded like girls in general, but puts it in from the shoulder in the true style. Her parents have punished her in various ways for playing ball on the street. It does no good, as her passion for it amounts to a mania.

Blanche Ramey, of Valley City, Dak., 4 years old, is a musical wonder. A local paper says that she plays the organ or piano strictly by note, and reads the notes with surprising rapidity and accuracy, and always counts her own time when playing." Her knowledge and observance in the playing of "rests, dots, accidentals, and in fact all the characters used in music is unsurpassed by any player." She lately played in the Opera house and was greeted with loud and extended applause, when she was lifted to the piano stool, and "deliberately executed, without a single mistake or hesitation, a charming solo, then retired, amid the cheers of the audience, with the dignity, grace and composure that would do honor to Patti."

ROYALTY.

The Emperor of Japan contemplates visiting this country soon.

King Humbert rises at 6, is busy all day, and seldom goes to bed until after midnight. Emperor Dom Pedro rises at 5 and works until 11 30 every night.

The earl of Aberdeen addressed the Y. M. C. A of San Francisco soon after arriving in that city. His lordship is a tall, slender man with a full, dark beard and mustache

The crown princess of Germany, Queen Victoria's eldest child, is a sensible and highly cultivated woman, and though a most excellent wife and mother, has never been free from home sickness since she was married, twenty nine years ago.

Two thousand domestic servants have presented to the Princess Christian of England a pretty gold brooch medal, forming a badge of their order, accompanied by a beautifully illuminated address, the whole being the outcome of a penny subscription.

Count Lanza J. Lepkowski, who died recently in New York, was the last known survivor of the Polish refugees who fled to the United States after the revolution of 1830. He supported himself by teaching the guitar during the fifty years he resided in the metropolis.

LABOR NOTES.

Advances of wages have been made in quite a number of small shops and factories throughout the state of New York.

Throughout New England the merits and demerits of dividing profits with workingmen are being discussed in an informal way.

A second official report sets the number of building and loan associations in New Jersey at 156, with 57,508 shareholders and $9,349,000 net assets

Some idea of the extent to which labor is organized in New York city may be formed from the fact that 168 societies held meetings there last week

The Pennsylvania legislature has enacted a law providing for a legal half holiday every Saturday afternoon from June 15 to September 15 of each year.

The stove manufacturers at Hamilton, Ont., have refused the increase of pay demanded by the Molders' union, and it is likely the union will order a strike

The New England house-builders are making no effort to advance wages. Employers are putting up a great many small houses which they will sell on easy terms.

At a recent meeting of the stove molders of Chicago they resolved to drop their demands for a 15 per cent. advance in wages and return to work at once.

The Pottsville, Pa., silk mill will employ from 600 to 1,000 hands, and the building, which will be 850 feet in length, including machinery, will cost $300,000.

All the Knights of Labor in the employ of George H. Burt & Co., shoe manufacturers, at Randolph, Mass., are out on a strike, owing to an alleged move by the firm to decrease their pay.

The railroad situation continues very favorable, construction is being pushed ahead with more vigor. Rail mills and bridge works are all overmold Very little foreign material is being ordered.

Three Ontario weavers have invented a process for weaving cloths of mixed materials so that they shall be inseparably woven, showing one surface of hemp or jute, and the other of cotton or wool.

There are a number of Deadwood miners in Alaska who speak favorably of the fact that they are having twenty hours of sunlight. It gives them a longer time to work than the Chicago bricklayers want.

The Omaha Knights of Labor had a lot of printing for the Fourth of July celebration, and when they discovered that it was done at a "rat" shop they destroyed the work and contracted for its reproduction with a union office

The carpenters have three strong unions in St Paul—an English, German and Scandinavian branch—the organization of the craft in that city now being almost perfect. While the brotherhood is separate and distinct from the Knights of Labor, a majority of the carpenters are members of both organizations in that city.

BIRDS, ANIMALS AND INSECTS.

A cat at Hayes, Texas, takes great delight in walking over the keys of a piano. She seems particularly fond of the high notes and executes a regular dance on the ivories at that end of the key board.

Henry Palmer, of Selma, Ill., is the owner of a wonderful rat-killing dog. Several weeks ago it killed 147 rats in less than an hour and a half. It is 14 years old and has but three legs

J. N. Clingan, of Blue Mound, Ill., has a cow that gives three large pailsful of milk every day—one in the morning, one at noon, and one at night. She has the advantage of most cows, as she has five milk giving teats.

Mr J R. Junker, of Jasper, Ind., has an eyeless chicken. It was hatched out about a week ago, and has but slight indentations where the eyes ought to be. It follows the mother around the yard and keeps close to her.

Col. Sim Lucas, of San Bernardino, Cal., captured on his ranch a bug that stalls all the bugologists in the city. It is not more than half an inch long and yet it has a stinger a quarter of an inch in length. It will bite like a dog and hold on like grim death

A Johnston (Pa.) boy, seeing a sparrow's nest disturbed in a tree near the house, climbed up to discover the cause, and there found the sparrow hanging by the neck dead. One of the hairs used in making the nest got twisted around the bird's neck and she was hanged

Forty-nine years ago the father of Harrison Gilbert, of Chili, Ill., bought a 2-year old pony from the Indians. When the rebellion began the pony was 25 years old, but Mr. Gilbert rode him through the war and neither was hurt. The old fellow lives on corn bread and bran mash, and is probably the oldest horse in America, if not in the world

M. M Sheats, of Watkinsville, Ga., saw in the woods near his house a large pine tree in which bees had made their nest He said nothing about it, and soon moved out of the neighborhood. After ten years he moved back, and one of the first things he did was to examine the bee tree The bees were still there, and he called in some of the neighbors for help, and cut the tree down, when it was found to contain a hollow thirty eight feet long and eight inches in diameter, chock full of honey from one end to the other.

THE AGED.

A Kent county, Mich., man, aged 60, who is a grandfather, has just been admitted to the bar.

Mrs. Eliza Fagundas, of Philadelphia, was preparing to celebrate her 100th birthday when she fell from a second story window and met an untimely death

Mrs. Annie Maupin, of Gasconade county, Mo., is a well preserved woman. She is 98 years old, can walk two miles at a stretch, and has seventy-two grandchildren.

Mrs. Magdalena Boges, of Milton, Ind., was born in Lancaster, Pa., Dec. 22, 1788, and is, therefore, nearly 101 years old. She is in pretty good health, but her memory is weak.

Levi Johnston, who died recently in Torringford, Conn., was born a slave in Cheshire, of that state, in 1790 He removed to Torrington in 1810, and in 1812 married his wife, Matia, with whom he lived sixty six years, she dying in 1878, at the age of 92 He was sexton of Torringford church over fifty years.

Julia Mitchell, an old negro resident of Milledgeville, Ga., is 120 years old, and in apparent good health. She was one of Governor Mitchell's slaves years ago, and she says she remembers the revolutionary war distinctly. She has been blind now for several years, but her memory of the long ago makes up an interesting conversation

Mrs. Annie Raush, of Letart, Va., whose 100th birthday has just been celebrated, is said to be the mother of the largest family in America. She was married when she was 15, and bore thirteen children, eight of whom are living. Her oldest child was born when she was 16, and her oldest living child is 78 Her oldest grandchild is 68 years old She has fifty-two great great grandchildren, and her descendants altogether number over 600. She is apparently good for years yet.

HOW SAILORS ARE FED.

JACK RECEIVES BETTER VICTUALS THAN HE DID TWENTY YEARS AGO.

The "Doctor" Is the Most Important Personage on the Ship—The Allowance of Food—Serving Out Provisions. The Slush Cask.

Sailors on deep water ships are better fed now than they were fifteen or twenty years ago. They get a greater variety. On board all deep water vessels three meals are served daily when the watches are changed at eight bells—at 8 a. m., noon, and 6 p. m. Besides this what is called early coffee is served to the watch on deck at 5 a. m., before the work of washing the decks commences. The cook, or, as he is always called, the "doctor," is the most important personage on the ship, and lucky is the seaman who can keep good friends with the cook, for he is certain to get lots of "nuicyclens"—a peculiar term given to the vands that are left from the cabin tables. These are called "gubbins," and are brought forward in what is called the dog basket, a large basket lined with tin.

Now as to the diet provided for Jack in the forecastle. Every sailor, when he goes aboard, is provided with a knife, fork and spoon, a "hookpot" and a panakin. The hookpot is a tin pot with an iron hook riveted on so that it can be hung on the side of the bunk while Jack is using both hands to eat with. In England everything is said to be done by act of parliament, and the sailor's food is certainly regulated by the act, and his daily bill of fare is fixed by law. In this country it is fixed by act of congress, and in vessels of both nations the ship captains are compelled, under a heavy penalty, to post in a conspicuous place in the forecastle a copy of the agreement signed by the sailors on shipping containing the quantity of rations signed for

THE ALLOWANCE OF FOOD.

The regular allowance of food for each man in both English and American merchant vessels should be as follows: Bread, one pound; tea, one-eighth of an ounce; coffee, one-half ounce; sugar, two ounces, and water, three quarts per day. Beef, six pounds; pork, one pound and a half; flour, one pound and a half; peas, one pint; rice, one-third of a pound per week. These provisions are to be served out in addition to the daily issue of lime juice or other anti-scorbutics It is also provided: "No sheath knives or grog allowed on board. Substitutes at master's option. The following substitutes are allowed: One ounce of coffee, cocoa or chocolate for one-quarter ounce of tea; molasses for sugar, quantity to be one half more; one pound of potatoes or yams; one-half pound of flour or rice, one-third pint of peas or one quarter pint of barley may be substituted for each other. When fresh meat is issued, the proportion to be two pounds per man per day in lieu of salt meat."

A landsman might think that one-half pound of beef or one and one quarter pounds of pork would be sufficient for a man, but when it is considered that a good deal of it is cut off as unfit for human food and thrown overboard, that the meat is weighed with the bone in, and that when salt meat is boiled it shrinks a great deal, Jack won't have much meat left to eat with his hardtack The beef, or as it is always termed "salt horse," is always all lean, and the salt pork is generally all fat. The meat is generally kept on deck in two casks called the "harness casks." The fat that rises to the surface when the meat is boiled in the salt water is saved by the cook and put into the slush cask This slush or fat is the cook's perquisite, and many a pound of fat meat he surreptitiously cuts from the meat to increase the amount in the slush cask. Arriving at port this fat is sold to the soapmakers, and the price fetched largely increases the "doctor's" pay. A good deal of the meat has made several voyages round the Horn or Cape of Good Hope, and when the cask is opened smells frightfully, and is really unfit for human food.

"WHO'S THIS WHACK FOR?"

When cooked the meat for each watch is placed in a wooden receptacle called a "kid," and taken into the forecastle. The peas are made into soup, the flour is made into "duff." It is mixed with water and boiled in a conical shaped bag in salt water. This makes the outside of the duff taste salty. On being taken into the forecastle, one man cuts the duff into as many pieces as there are men in the watch, some pieces larger than others.

Another one then turns his back, and as the carver holds up a piece on his jack knife and says, "Who's this whack for?" designates the man who takes the piece. Sugar is eaten with the duff, or molasses when served out extra, as is often done. The pea soup is often made thick by pouring a little vinegar in and eaten that way, and some old salts stir a spoonful of sugar in the soup, making a queer mess. On Christmas day, and maybe the skipper's birthday, raisins are boiled in with the flour, and then "plum duff" is served. Whenever a pig is killed on board ship the afterguards gets chops and sausages, and Jack gets sea pie, and it makes his mouth water to think of it, for it is a tasty dish, and, like angel visits, few and far between This is how it is cooked: The "doctor" places a layer of bones on the bottom of his largest copper or kettle. On this he places a layer of pork, cut in chunks and seasoned; on this goes a layer of pastry, then another layer of pork, and so on, till three layers of each are laid This is called a "three-decker," and when boiled to perfection is a sailor's delight The meat is always sent to the forecastle at meantime, and it invariably happens that all or nearly all is eaten at that meal, and for the following supper and breakfast next morning Jack has nothing to eat but hardtack, washed down with the decoctions called tea and coffee Any housewife knows the strength of a decoction made of a pint of water and one-eighth ounce of tea or one-half ounce of coffee.—San Francisco Call.

Neglected Buckingham Palace.

A gossiping newsmonger writes from London that when they began to put Buckingham palace in order for the accommodation of the jubilee guests, its condition was found to be anything but edifying. The upper stories, which had not been inhabited for years, were absolutely filthy, the carpets and curtains all tattered, and the wall paper in many places defaced.—Boston Transcript.

Consent Was Given.

Marshall P Wilder tells the following story: "During the late stormy weather Buffalo Bill had a little gathering in his tent of friends, among whom were a number of cowboys During the fun an invited Englishman entered and said, 'Aw, beg pawdon, but—aw, may I keep my hat on?' 'Yes, old boy,' replied a cowboy, 'if you keep your boots on.'"—New York Sun.

A German physicist's new air thermometer not merely indicates but measures temperatures to one ten-thousandth of a centigrade degree.

Painting on Living Canvas.

In these quarrelsome days painting on living canvas is not infrequent. The object of the painter's brush in such cases is to conceal the ravages of an opponent's fist, in other words, to hide the very degrading "black eye." It has not been very long that the painter has had a chance to let his brush descend so such a low but remunerative level, but the practice is growing in favor. A man can now get into the worst sort of a fight, have both eyes blackened to pugilistic perfection, and yet the painter can conceal it so that not even his wife would know he had been in a fight. The treatment must be repeated every day until the discoloration disappears, as during the night the patient in his sleep brushes the paint off. Each treatment costs from $2 up, according to the space to be covered, but I have never yet had a customer who did not think the price small and would not have gladly paid double the amount.

Not long ago a young fellow, who had been threatened with a discharge if he got drunk again, went out for a night with the boys one Saturday and came to me Sunday with a pair of the blackest eyes I think I ever saw. He had been pounded in a drunken fight and the discoloration extended down to his cheeks. Had he gone to work with that pair of optics he would have been dismissed at once. But a few touches of the brush and he was all right. He went to church that night, appeared at the store Monday, escaped all detection, and never heard a word of his escapade from his employers.—"Artist" in Globe-Democrat.

A Very Peculiar Throat Disease.

One great disadvantage that Nevada has always labored under is the scarcity and poor quality of the water. Not one of our own streams empties directly or indirectly into any large body of water, but all disappear, sink, as it seemed, into some small lake, or directly into the ground. This makes the water very brackish and unpleasant, as in the process of evaporation all the saline and alkaline matter is left in the bed of the stream, and the water thus becomes worse every year. Recently a very peculiar disease has been observed in the regions about Pioche, which threatens to make residence in Nevada even more undesirable than it has hitherto been considered to be

Among the very old residents, and especially among the few children who have been born in that district, a marked tendency to enlargement of the throat has been observed, accompanied at times by sharp pains. The disease resembles the Swiss goitre in many respects, with painful inflammation that is not characteristic of the goitre Those who have used the alkali water most freely through any great length of time are most subject to it, and the physicians ascribe the disease entirely to the water, and have not found any remedy Children are especially liable to this disorder, and it has often proved fatal. Virginia City is better off in regard to water than any other place, and thus far our largest town has escaped, but if things go on as they are at present, Nevada will be avoided as a permanent place of residence, and will sink into a mere camp, where no one will stay longer than necessary.—Globe-Democrat.

The Berkshire Dialect.

The Berkshire dialect has many curious provincialisms, some of true Saxon origin. Thus the Berkshire man says "thik" for that; "thim" for he; "rot" for rat; "not" for gnat; "postis" for posts; and "thof" for though. Nearly is "anenst;" houses, "housen;" peas, "peasen;" care for, "hoe for;" battle, "frow;" sprightly, "sprack;" tags, "littocks;" clumsy, "lungersome," angry, "scrow;" wretched, "naked;" hungry, "leer," troublesome, "prodigal;" and garden, "ghen." To prefix is to, "mouch;" to garner, to "garn;" and to bind, to "grip" A man is "queasy" if he is sick, and "deedy" if he is notable. This latter term is expressive. "Do'it" is wilt thou;" "overrights" is opposite; to entice is to "tole away," to labor is to "scrawt;" to muddle is to "saddle;" in great spirits is to be "in great spout;" and the scolded child complains of his corrector that "he do chape of;" he "torments" when he "terrifies;" and he "terrifies" when he wishes to torment.—The Literary World.

He Hit Upon an Idea.

I have only known of one instance where baldness proved remunerating. A friend of mine who had a shining pate fell into the habit of watching the actions of his tormentors—the flies. He noticed that a fly always walks upward. Put a fly on a window and up he goes toward the top; he can't be made to walk downward So my friend hit upon an idea Why not use that habit against them? Forthwith he made a window screen divided in half. The upper half hupped over the lower, with an inch of space between Well, as soon as a fly would light on the screen he would proceed to travel upward, and would thus walk straight outdoors On reaching the top of the lower half he would be outside. Not being able to walk down he had no way to return to the room. By this means a room can be quickly cleared of flies, which always seek the light. My friend has got out a patent, and proposes to begin a systematic war against the household pest.—Globe Democrat.

How to Address Your Enemy.

In parliamentary language you may say that a man is not wedded to the truth;

Or sometimes suffers from a spirit of exaggeration;

Or occasionally finds it difficult to confine himself strictly to actualities;

Or is fettered by the four corners of hard matter of fact;

Or is a past master in the pleasing art of realistically romancing;

Or is partial, in describing nature, to borrowing from the pages of romance;

Or is much given to an artificial recollection of misleading statistics;

Or cannot distinguish the false from the true, with a bias toward the former,

Or has a distinct liking for the utterance of statements of a misleading character.

But you must not! No, you must not! You really must not! Call him a liar!—Punch.

Herrmann and the Sultan's Watch.

Herrmann once performed before the Sultan Abdul Aziz, and threw a valuable watch of his majesty's into the Bosphorus. There was a great outcry, which the conjurer checked by conjuring up the watch again into the sultan's pocket. For this he received a present of 500 Turkish pounds. It seems, however, that he really did throw the sultan's watch into the water, and that the one which he conjured back was a replica duplicate, obtained beforehand from the maker of the original timepiece.—London Times.

On the Cowboy Order

Late Saturday night just as John Cull had cleared his saloon preparatory to closing, four strangers entered the back door and called for beer Four glasses of beer were set out to them when one fellow protested that he wanted his warm John suggested peppermint be added but they would not have that and asked for black berry wine That was handed out and to a bottle of the four added a good sized dram of black berry to five cent glasses of beer The trio was evidently played to raise a disturbance for when John charged an additional nickel for the black berry they at once balked It was a small matter but just what they wanted so when John refused to return it they proceeded to lam up Chris Kechler was present and two went for him with sling shots while the other two made for John with like weapons John disarmed one assailant and by telling went put the two out Chris Kechler did not fare so well for a severe blow with a sling shot on his head had stunned him badly, and had John not rescued him he would have been badly used up These two were also put out and they were soon out of reach of the police Kechler was badly cut on the head but a few stitches put the wound in good shape From the suspicious actions of the four it is natural to suppose that they came expecting to rob the place, but finding more than John there they could not accomplish the feat

A Great Success

The colored camp meeting under the auspices of the second M E church of this city closed at Green Camp Sunday pronounced to be a great success

The last meeting, that afternoon was especially successful Rev A D Matthews and A C Barnes were present and participated The former preached a telling sermon and the latter followed with appropriate remarks after which the "Prodigal Son and Fatted Calf" were illustrated by a colored Rev J Henderson pastor in charge, assumed the character of the forgiving father and the prodigal was ably acted by Legenthumman Green The performance was so real that the immense audience was highly interested and then the lesson was faithfully closed by a feast on the fatted calf that had been properly roasted the day before and was ready to be served to the immense crowd

The meeting was not a pecuniary financial success but the minister in charge is highly pleased with the spiritual results

He Skipped

J W Kramer who was arrested Monday for assault and battery on charges preferred by his wife, Grace Kramer was to have had his hearing before Mayor Coley that afternoon The witnesses were all present and the court was ready to begin the hearing when Kramer was permitted to go down to get bail with which he intended to waive examination and be bound over to court Nothing was thought of allowing him the freedom to go upon the streets, but when an hour had passed and he did not return, things began to look suspicious Marshal Pennock started out to hunt for him but he was nowhere to be found and as the hours passed away it became very evident that he had skipped and the court adjourned

On Tuesday a wild looking and excited man with eyes all aflame rushed into the county office of Norris & Christian Inquiring the telephone violently he called up a leading lawyer The lawyer said get A moment later and Tom Kramer was going north on the center

BOBBY KERR'S WILL

An Abstract of the Bequests Codicils and Executive Provisions The Crandall Burn the Packet Heirs

For every brief space of time on Wednesday the STAR was permitted to glance over the much talked of will of the late Robt Kerr

The codicils record so much of the will proper that its publication in detail would be uninteresting and misleading so to satisfy the curiosity of our readers we give in substance the important points were upon present an orderly reading

It starts out in the usual form of wills Items 1 2 3 4 5 6 and 7 bequeath and devise to Elizabeth Young Sarah Harris Stephen Kerr, Mary Ann Amanda Dunham John Kerr and Adelaide Kerr respectively each an undivided one seventh interest in the estate

Item Second creates the trust fund to C I Want his trustee, he gives his entire interest in the capital stock of the Nevada Deposit bank to which $40 000 additional is to be invested in increased capital stock to be held by him and invested for his grandchildren Mr Want is to hold the same in trust for thirty years from the date of Kerr's decease, investing, the earnings safely and profitably for the period of twenty years when he shall begin paying the dividends on all the moneys thus accumulated to the grandchildren dividing the one seventh equally among the children of Sarah one seventh among the children of John and so on At the end of thirty years the fund held in trust is to be divided on the same plan among the grandchildren or their children It seems to be his desire to first divide the benefits of the trust into seven parts a seventh then to be equally distributed among the children of each of the families The trust fund itself is likewise divided and provision made for deaths of beneficiaries Thus if one daughter or son his but one child that one will get as much as all the rest of another family of grandchildren

Item nine makes John F Hime sole executor and trustee of all other funds not already devised He is ordered to pay all debts and then invest all remaining funds excepting bank stocks, and hold the same in trust for thirty years same as in item 8 He is instructed to convert all chattels into money settle and compound claims as he deems best, and what remains to be kept in his hands as trustee under the same provisions as in the case of C I want the funds to go to the grandchildren in the same manner

In this item is a provision that any heir who attempts to profit by the anticipation of the bequest or who attempts to mortgage his share or make use of same in any such manner then the bequest is forfeited

Item 10 provides that no bond shall be given by C C I want as trustee and item 11 requires that F J Hime gives no such bond either as executor or trustee

Item 12 on the same subject makes the matter of bond discretionary with the Probate Court of Marion county where demand the same if the administration of affairs seems to be so conducted as to demand it Item 13 instructs the court to fill vacancies in case of resignation or death

This ends the will made in December 1877 witnessed by I C Hains and P O Sharpless

The first codicil was made in April 1878 It appoints F J M Neal attorney of his executor and trustees, and limits the trust with C C I want to $60 000 of Nevada bank stock Orders all notes against his children delivered up to them and deeds Amanda Dunnigan her house and lot in Ashland O

The second codicil was made in September, 1879 It simply adds the Nevada bank building and hotel to the trust fund of C C I want under the provisions of item 8

The third codicil was made at Nevada, where he temporarily resided in May 1883 It cancels items 1 to 7 inclusive saying that deeds had been made of the funds to his children and that was all they were to have and decided as he wanted it

Still other codicils have been made since the above date, after Uncle Bob invested in the Kansas banking business with Litton They are quite lengthy change the executor we are told, make other trustees and change the administration of affairs generally

He Liked to Fool Them

The Bucyrus Journal has a very interesting obituary of Robt Kerr We make this interesting excerpt

His speech eccentricity was his supreme contempt for the opinions of the people It was his delight to dress in the most slovenly style and he took a pride in looking as uncouth as possible and then boasted of his wealth When away where he was not known he would frequently step into a large city hotel with its plate glass windows and handsome furnishings and coolly draw a check away up in the thousands on one of his banks and present it to the neatly dressed cashier, and when the cashier would take in his slovenly appearance and ask with contempt for identification he would instruct them to telegraph if the check was good and of course the answer would come back Bob Kerr is good for the check, now fill the money in your bank if he wants it The cashier would be astonished and Kerr satisfied?

A Big Snake Story

From Sparta Morrow county comes the monster story It seems that a few days ago an engineer on the Baltimore and Ohio road while running from Peoria to Mt Gilead observed a large black object lying near the track somewhere near Culvers woods On nearing the object it moved to one side, raising its head as high as the tender The engineer says that it was a large snake but could not tell its length Arriving at Marengo he spread the news and soon a great many were on the chase The snake was pursued for several days Its track could be plainly seen in many places Through the meadows it broke down the grass leaving a trail 10 inches wide, and at crossing creek it would spread the dust, making a trail eight inches wide The monster was finally seen about three miles west of Sparta and was killed by Dave Hunt of Bloomfield, by being shot in the head

The snake measured seventeen feet and two inches in length This monster reptile is producing much talk there, and excitement is running high

THOUGHTS!

—FOR—

PEOPLE WHO REASON.

We know that no thinking persons will believe every advertisement claiming the "largest stock" and the "cheapest prices" All dealers cannot truthfully claim these, for there is but one firm that can have the largest stock and but one that can sell the cheapest Now someone has been misrepresenting the case, and patrons should learn whom to depend upon Personal examination will settle the matter We claim the largest stock and sell at the lowest prices, and can verify the statement to all who call at our store

THE CLARKE FRUIT JAR

IS THE BEST

It is absolutely air tight

It is more easily closed and opened than any other jar in the market

The fastening is attached to the jar and there are therefore no pieces to get lost The same cover will fit either pint, quart or half gallon jar

The bail is made of the best kind of Steel Spring Wire, which gives a constant and uniform pressure to the cover of the jar without regard to the expansion or contraction of the glass, and therefore the fastening does not have to be re adjusted after the jar and its contents have cooled

The cover is so constructed that the gasket cannot be displaced

The fastening is so constructed that it will not break the jar or the cover in locking

No metal comes in contact with the fruit, and therefore no poisonous oxides are formed

This jar can be easily adjusted by a child

The only place they can be found is at the

PALACE GROCERY HOUSE.

As I have a great many jars, they must go, and we will make a price that will make them go Don't forget the place,

PETER PATTERSON.

He was a tailor by trade, this Peter—a tailor in the great city of Gotham. He left the country in his first youth, answering an advertisement in a daily paper, and being honest and plodding, worked his way up till he had a business of his own, caused to think of little Lydia Marsh, the sweetheart who had never forgotten him, and became a well to do man with a stout easy going wife and a comfortable home in an unfashionable quarter of the city.

In due course of time Mrs. Peter Patterson left her comfortable home forever. In the twenty long years of her married life she had been childless, and yet never regretted it. She had, in her want of other and nobler occupation, eaten too much and walked too little, so one day she was found lifeless on her parlor floor, from an attack of apoplexy.

Now Peter had at least fifty thousand dollars well invested, and on a lucky day he was offered thirty thousand more for the stock and custom of his store, no longer a mere tailor's shop, but a great, profitable clothing establishment. He sold out his business, invested his money, and went back to Framingham where he was born, to try a change of air. There he found his old sweetheart, Lydia Marsh, still alive and unmarried.

Lydia had grown tall, thin and gray since he knew her, but she was still meek, simple, affectionate and very glad to renew her acquaintance with Peter, who had found but few whom he remembered left in Framingham and was glad of one cordial welcome. Now, Lydia Marsh having enough money to live on as single women do live in the country, and little enough to do in her house, where a bound girl and a cat constituted all the family, had taken violently to the temperance cause. It is an odd thing that almost all the old maids and widows in a country town do become devoted either to the work of temperance or the cause of foreign missions. There may be plenty of white heathen at their door, their next neighbor may be a drunkard and abuse his wife and children, but these specialties do not interest them, they take to glittering generalities even as ducks to water, and find a pleasant excitement in figuring as officers of an organization. The married women, with husbands and children to provide for, have "other fish to fry," and with a few sad and painful exceptions adhere to their womanly duties in "that sweet, safe corner by the household fire," made for good women.

Now Peter was dull and lonesome in his inn, and it became a matter of course with him to spend his evenings with Lydia. The amiable enthusiast plied him with her own notions and achievements till he became interested deeply both in her and in her work. The old love, like Aaron's dry rod, budded and blossomed, and he made a formal proposal to Lydia, who modestly accepted him for better or worse. By this time Peter was extremely bored by Framingham quiet and dullness, life was by no means desirous to spend the rest of his days there. His dyspepsia was better, and he discovered that Lydia was an excellent cook and housekeeper, consequently he persuaded her to set an early day for the wedding, and hastened back to the city to provide a new home.

Of course, with his moderate means, he had to buy a house in a block, but then there are certain conveniences in that, your house is warmer than a single mansion, your neighbors cannot make more outside show than you do, a block, like death, reduces men to the same level—apparently, at least, and whether you wish to have a characteristic dwelling or not, you can't have it, except within. Lydia gasped a little at the idea of "goin' to York to live." It was a great elevation, and Framingham people bristled with envy but Lydia rather dreaded it. However, Peter soothed her with stories of city conveniences, a kitchen where the water, both hot and cold, came into the sink at her pleasure, no lamps to fill or trim, no weekly butcher to wait and stay at home for, all the needs and luxuries of life close at hand, unlimited meetings and temperance lectures, and affiliation awaiting her with all the women's unions and female leagues known to her hitherto as distant glories and powers through the newspapers. What a change from the one feeble society in Framingham, where she had only been a member!—one of three—the other six were all officers.

So in due time Lydia was installed in her new home, along with the willing bound girl and the unwilling cat, and reveled in the glories of a city house with a basement kitchen, a parlor with red plush furniture and a blue tapestry carpet, ornamented with large and forbidding portraits of Peter in his neatly parted wig and Sunday coat, vis-à-vis with the first Mrs. Peter, round and snug in a black velvet gown. It is as cheap to be painted in velvet as in calico. This state apartment was kept dark and still. The square room behind it was the living room, and both Peter's and Lydia's old furnishings were sprinkled sparsely over the rest of the house.

They had very little society, for Peter's social development had always been small, but Lydia found enough to do in her new house and her evening meetings, and Peter joined a man's temperance society who held their meetings in the same building where Lydia's branch of the women's league held theirs, so that it was remarkably convenient for them to go and come together.

Deprived of any other outlet for his busy nature, Peter soon became a prominent person in the M. T. A. Circle No. 1. He rose to the rank of secretary and was then elected vice president. Lydia had no such honors showered on her, naturally modest she was afraid to speak before a crowd of strangers. But while her sensitive womanhood led her to keep silence, she was a regular attendant and a liberal contributor, so the "sistering" did not frown upon her.

Peter, however, was as active as a blue bottle fly, he talked and prayed and worked with vigorous zeal, he button-holed indifferent men, and awoke their interest, he hauled more than one youth from the saloons where he was beginning to slide down the easy descent of degradation, and helped him to stand there after on his feet and many a wife bereft worse than by death, many a family of more than fatherless children, blessed the good, fussy little man who fed and clothed them, and promptly clapped the drunken brute who figured as the "head" of those desolate households into the places prepared for such transgressors.

About a year after Peter set up his household gods in the uptown block the city was visited by two noted female apostles of the temperance cause—Mrs. Johnson Paul and Miss Adeline Nary. Their eloquence of speech their gifts in prayer, their organizing powers, their acceptance with the sisterse everywhere were the theme of every tongue. Quiet Lydia came home from her weekly meeting full of mild enthusiasm. She was carried away with sister Lark. Never had she heard such fluent speech, so clear so convincing, so tender and as for sister Nary she never heard such a prayer as that woman made—never.

And so she went on drills, for she left the household to Betsey Ann and the cat, and followed these two wherever they went to preach or to teach, in the churches the halls, the—anywhere Peter could not but share in her interest he listened to her reports of meetings with both his ears and all his soul. He looked upon Lydia as favored above measure, and fairly plied to have these wonderful women admit the general public to their presence, and allow them to share their gifts and graces but the meetings so far were so crowded with women that there was no place found for men.

One day Betsey Ann announced to Lydia that Somebody's been a movin into the next house, Miss Patterson, p'raps you're goin' to hev neighbors that side, of you haven't got them 'tother."

It had been a mystery and a trial to Lydia ever since she came to her new home that her next door neighbors did not call on her. She did not even know their names. She saw a man leave the house after breakfast and return before dinner, and sometimes she saw a lady go out and take the cross town cars once she had done that at the same time, but she did not quite dare to "scrape acquaintance," as she termed it, and as there was no door plate on that door she could not address the lady by name. It seemed a cold, unchristian way to live but after a time she became used to it and in her interesting meetings forgot this unpleasant state of things. The left hand house had long been empty but Lydia was not so sanguine about its new occupants as her handmaid. Still, being from the country, where we all make it our business to know every man, woman and child who goes into or comes out of the next houses, and those across the street besides, Lydia did turn a watchful eye on the new family. She observed that they kept later hours than she and Peter did, for night after night, when Peter had locked every lock and turned out every burner, when the cat was slaughtering the innocents in the cellar and kitchen, when Betsey was snoring in the attic, and the worthy pair themselves were safe in bed and asleep Lydia would suddenly wake, lift her deep frilled nightcap from the pillow, and hearing the roll of a carriage come up the street, stop, a bell ring, sharply, and doors open and shut, she would remark to the still slumbering Peter "Those folks next door is pretty late birds." Yet she had never caught a glimpse of them for two months after they were settled at her left hand.

One dark wintry night there set in a heavy rain, so heavy that neither Peter nor Lydia thought it safe to go out, for the water froze as it fell, and the streets were a sheet of wet ice, they were very much disappointed, for that night Mrs. Johnson Park and Miss Adeline Nary were to speak in a grand meeting for "both sexes," as the advertisement specially announced. But Peter was too round to trust himself out in such a state of things, and Lydia could not go alone so they passed a quiet evening by the fire, or rather by that hole in the floor which represents the family hearth in city houses, Peter reading aloud the latest papers and pamphlets issued by the temperance party, and Lydia peacefully knitting on a silk sock destined for her lord and master.

There were some awful revelations in those papers that excited Peter very much, statistics as to the amount of habitual drunkenness among the female leaders of society in the city shocked his very soul he read and reread, commented and groaned till Lydia began to shiver at the thought that all the rich and aristocratic women in Gotham were in constant danger of delirium tremens. In fact, when bedtime came, and sleep descended on the eyes of the worthy pair, they were both dreaming of reeling women in scant skin and velvet diamonds glittering in their ears and plumes waving above their foolish faces who blocked Fifth avenue, and refused passage to sober folk when they were simultaneously roused by a sharp, imperative ring at the door bell.

Peter jumped and hurried on his clothes. "Don't you come!" he smartly addressed Lydia. "It's probably murder, or fire. You stay right there."

Lydia sank back obediently, and an other loud peal hurried Peter to the door. He stopped to light the gas in the hall, and as it flashed up heard a carriage drive away and another ring smote on his ear. He opened the door and the light streamed on two women, flushed of face dripping with rain clothed with old waterproof cloaks dishevelled curls peeping from one hood, and a straight rough bang from the other.

"Go off the steps you drunken wretches!" screamed Peter, slamming the door in their faces. Then he turned down the gas and listened at the keyhole.

"Oh Janet how dreadful! It must be that brother of Bridget's that was to come as our waiter to day he don't know us, Oh I stagger so on this wet ice!"

Peter caught the words, "dreadful" and "stagger," and nodded his head sagaciously.

Again the bell rang, fiercely, and two pair of hands assaulted the door it shook, but did not yield.

"Why don't you open the door? We are frozen. Where is Bridget? We are wet through. Let us in!"

"I'll not! I evidently not used to cold water," chuckled Peter stepping his way up the stairs, and finding Lydia quite pale with fright.

"Oh! oh! What—what was it Peter?"

"Nothin'—nothing my dear. Two manifestly inebriated females who wished to get in. Sad—very sad but so. You recollect what Dr. Coldwater Herald said in that article on the increasing intemperance of the female sex this evening? Well this is an awful proof of the correctness of that statement. You won't be troubled with them I think any more."

"Oh Peter what if it should be the people in the next house!"

"It may be. I think their late hours point in that direction."

And with a comfortable sense of being morally far above his neighbors, Peter lay down and kept the sleep of the consciously upright man.

Meantime the two luckless women on the door step had been fortunate enough to see a policeman in the distance and wait for till he was near the tallest one said "Won't you be kind enough to make the inmates here open this door? We were carried past it by the force of the latch key, and the servant didn't recognize us."

"Are you sure this is the right door?" said the officer, who was a married man.

"Two hundred and eighteen, was the prompt answer.

"I will be this bull's eye on the door. Ah think I thought that was the way it, it is not door you are, an why could they better tell us when we worn't there."

Oh!" And a little hysterical laugh followed. Then with much slipping and scrambling the two thoroughly wet women went down one set of steps and up another and left a dollar into the willing palm of the city guardian, and ringing their own bell were soon inside their own door.

The next afternoon Peter encountered at the reading room of his special society a prominent temperance man who was thoroughly at work for the cause knew all about its organization and ran its mass meetings.

In the course of conversation Peter remarked to Mr. Blair that it was very sad to find how dreadfulness was spreading among women. "Only last night, sir," he went on with the slight pomposity of a man who knows of what he speaks and is gratified therefore to instruct his hearer—"yes only last night I was aroused by frantic pulls of my door bell loud cries and knockings and when I hurried down and opened the door there stood two quite respectable females. I caught a glimpse of a velvet dress, so on one and I think the other was clothed in satin—yes sir, I should say yellow satin"—(Oh Peter! it was old gold)—"but their hair was strangled all out and their faces red. They was manifestly inebriated—yes, sir they was indeed."

"Dear me! dear me! And what did you do with them?" inquired good Mr. Blair.

"Let them alone sir. Yes sir, let them severely alone. There's a police man has a midnight beat on our street. I rather think he looked em in."

"Up there, Mr. Patterson our mass meeting to night is put off. I just went up—street to see Mrs. Johnson Paul in answer to a telegram she sent me and found her seriously ill—quite unable to speak to night. She is threatened with rheumatic fever, and Miss Nary has a bronze cold."

"Oh! I hoped I should hear them to night," said Peter in a tone of disappointment.

"No one will. You see the meeting last evening closed very late, and the night was so rainy the driver of their carriage made a mistake and stopped at the wrong door—the next house. They did not know it, and made fruitless efforts to get in, standing in the cold rain till they were wet through, before a police man passed and pointed out their mistake. I am afraid they will both be seriously ill."

A terrible idea darted into Peter's head. "Did you say they live on —— street?" he gasped. "What number?"

"Two hundred and eighteen."

"O—h!" groaned Peter.

He had called the women he worshiped afar off the great lights of the M. N. O. P. Q. drunken wretches to their faces. Poor Peter.—Patterson.—Rose Terry Cooke, in Harper's Bazar.

A Talent Made the Millionaire

A wealthy and eccentric old manufacturer of patent medicines, of Roxbury, Mass., has been in New York for several days past. He spends most of the year abroad on account of the poor health of his wife, who is a consumptive. They live at Pegli, Italy, seven miles from Genoa. The doctor is a red faced, bulky built Scotchman, with a rim of stubby white whiskers around his chin and a gray mustache. He wears a soft white hat of ancient style and most ordinary clothing. He is worth $1,000,000 or more but began his career as a manufacturer of patent medicine by selling from a basket which he carried on his arm. He was then a blacksmith. In talking with me about patent medicine sales he said:

"Business was bad last year on account of the labor trouble, and there was a great falling off in sales and returns. Our medicines are largely used by poor people. It is not time as often stated that the poor people take medicine merely for the sake of trying it. My compound is so bitter and distasteful that they would not take it on that account. There are some bitters that men might be tempted to take in that way. When I began making my medicine it was just about the time when Townsend's sarsaparilla was going out of use. It was almost nothing but water and molasses. I went to the other extreme, and made a bitter medicine, which probably I should not have done if I had to do it over again. Business is better this year, and about its old standard."—Cor. Cincinnati Inquirer.

People Who Share Themselves

In spite of the hardening into which the many rush through life there is wide spread lamentation among that necessary class the barbers over the fact that a very large proportion of young men have taken to shaving themselves. The old fellow those who have been getting shaved so long that they now drop into a chair as gladly as a tired man does into a bed show no signs of faltering in their attendance upon the shops and middle aged fellows are faithful too. But the soon men are patronizing more and more after the English brethren and rapidly learning the art themselves. The very haste at which they are obliged to live is driving them to it, in fact. They cannot wait in a barber shop they say. At home soap hot water towels and other necessaries are readily available, and this being true, the mere act of shaving can be quickly performed. It takes time and patience to acquire proficiency in the art but once acquired there is no desire to patronize the professional. To the men who shave every day, too the money saved amounts to considerable in a year fully warranting the remark of the shrewd old millionaire to the young man who asked him how to acquire wealth. "Work hard get married and shave yourself."—Philadelphia Times.

The New Street Car Conductor

It is the easiest of easy things to tell when there is a new conductor aboard of a street car. In the first place his peculiar awkwardness is a most positive assurance. There are several other ways that reveal him. One is that he is very apt to ask you for your fare the second time another that he is too busily engaged in watching his passengers to look smilingly on the ladies and he never attempts to flirt until he has been on the road a couple of months. A new street car conductor never wins a button hole bouquet under any circumstances.—Conductor in Globe Democrat.

It would both most convenient
To give full's around a scare.

Soon they spied the country parson,
A near sighted lank divin'
Driving down the road to him,
On his many shaded mare
Up they slyly sat behin' him,
An' I'm with his wagon sob
A torpedo off that started
The old mare upon a trot.

Goodness gracious! it was awful!
How that old gray mare did pro
Her long tailed striped parson a
Frantic stouts of Whoa—there—whoa!"
As the rustles in their doorways
Now I never, sight never had
Scandalized that old time simple rout!—
Wes their parson going mad?

Tommy an' his comrade chuckled
Over the old city's hullabaloo
Though it was a long beginning
For a lively day of fun!
Later on of tricks unwearied
They a big firecracker lit
Tied it on a stray Tom cat's tail
An' the feline took a fit.

In a field close by a Biddy
Trest from Pat's lovely isle
Satin flaking an' I bounce
When like light'ning o'er a stile
Leaped the mettled Tom cat after,
All at his fiery tail
And upset the Biddy's luncheon
With her overflowing pail.

Unto Tommy's smiling mother
Ruefully mid pensive calls
And declared she would no longer
Stray where beasts have devils tails!'
Now was waxing to retain her
Sotto voice in lively goo-by'
Bade she on it not take Fourth of July
Of the Fourth day of July

As the purple shades of twilight
Hovered standardly nigh
And the bell was at last was over
Tommy's pocket—Fourth July—
Wicked I now as I his comrade,
With malice unconcern
Hit their timid neighbor timber
In the hay I fort on a barn

Both the culprits soon were rescued
From the barn of Hazing hay
Thereby I my unfruitful diddy
In a state I will dismay
Now rumors shall dimes or pennies
Fill Tommy's land to buy
Fireworks—if his daddy knows it—
On a future Fourth July

A Pleasant Time

"I have spent a most delightful evening, Miss Breezy," remarked young Mr. Waldo, of Boston who is in Chicago on business. "To a gentleman far away from home an hour or two such as I have just passed is peculiarly grateful and refreshing."

"Thanks," softly responded Miss Breezy.

As it is quite early, went on Mr. Waldo, "I would be very gladly, and your mother would go with me for a dish of ice cream."

"Thanks," said the young lady brightly. "I presume mamma is agreeable and as for myself Mr. Waldo my mouth is always wide open for that sort of thing."—New York Sun.

Republished by "Our" Request

An editor of a country paper having been invited to a picnic on a day when his paper had to go to press called the boy who set the type and said: "Tom, I'm going away today and haven't time to get out any more copy. Take my article headed 'Party Organization' and run it in again putting over it 'Republished by request.' That will save considerable time and you can go to press at once." When the editor returned from the picnic and took up a copy of his paper he became justly indignant upon reading the following: "Party Organization. Republished by request of the editor."—Arkansaw Traveler.

He sat on the cast stove in front of the city hall, in the full glare of the noonday sun with the thermometer seeming to mark 400 degrees. A pedestrian, who carried an umbrella in one hand and a handkerchief in the other, thought to joke him a little, and called out:

"Well is this hot enough for you?"

"No sir," was the prompt reply.

"Good! I'm glad to hear you say that."

A MILE A MINUTE.

THE STORY A STRANGER TOLD AT A DENVER HOTEL

A Feat to Which the Records of Equestrianism Afford No Parallel—Involuntary Jobbeggaading on a Bronco—A Miraculous Escape from Death.

The grizzled stranger removed a section of tobacco from his mouth and began:

"It happened five years ago last fall. I was living in Leadville at the time but had mining interests that took me frequently into the outlying districts for a radius of perhaps a dozen miles. These trips I usually always made on horseback, on a tough little bronco hard mouthed, trained to mountain trails and capable of keeping up a jog trot at a pinch for twenty hours on a stretch. On the occasion in question I started very early one clear, cold morning for a claim I owned on the other side of the divide on the slope of what is called Gold Mountain—you can find it by looking on any map.

"I took things easy and it was about noon when I reached the claim. I had a couple of men at work there ate dinner at their cabin and then went over to look at the shaft. One has no idea how rapidly time passes underground where everything is dark and when I came up I was surprised to find that it was nearly 4 o'clock and the shadows of pines a hundred yards off had crawled up to the windlass. I was annoyed too, for there was a suggestion of snow in the air, and the ride across Tennessee park in a storm is—well the less said about it the better. So I told no man in getting into the saddle and pushed rapidly ahead toward the pass. I had to go quite a little distance before I reached it and all the time the sky grew grayer and grayer and presently a few flakes began to fall. I urged the bronco and finally began the descent.

"The trail beyond the pass led down a long, straight incline for about a quarter of a mile. This took it to the fringes of timber line and then it made a detour of nearly two miles to get around a spur of the range. At that point I paused. The idea occurred to me that I could make a short cut by going directly over the spur and striking the trail on the other side. The range was not particularly steep at this place but rather a succession of rough cliffs and the undertaking did not seem to be accompanied by danger. A sudden raw wind decided me. I turned the bronco off the trail and started.

"The plan appeared the more feasible as I advanced. What looked like steep ascents at a distance proved to be gentle ones, and I was soon pretty nearly across the spur was well wooded with old pine trees. I remember yet how between the tree tops I caught a glimpse of the park with the Arkansas river winding through it, and the whole thing looking like some map in my old geography. That was the last thing that impressed itself on my mind before my horse stumbled, tumbled, plunged a little, and then came down with a crash first on his fore legs, and then flat on his belly, his head down hill. I can't readily describe it but he fell in such a way that my right leg, without being crushed or even much bruised was twisted in the stirrup strap and caught fast.

"Right here let me stop to explain a circumstance that will enable you to understand the situation. Down in the valley, at the base of Gold mountain was a saw mill owned by George Lacy of Leadville and extending up from it and almost to timber line was what is called a log shoot. This is simply a V shaped trough, large enough to hold a good sized pine trunk, and built solidly against the face of the mountain. Of course it has to be straight, or nearly so to permit the logs to slide down without obstruction and use soon makes the inside as smooth as glass. Such a contrivance saves a great deal of hauling for as the trees are cut they are dragged over and dumped into the trough, and go down into the yard like a streak of lightning. In the course of time the pine since will drive the trough in pretty nearly to the level of the earth. This was the case with the Lacy shoot. I was well enough acquainted with the mountains to know the instant my bronco fell that he had walked into the old log shoot.

"It takes a moment for the coolest head to clear itself in times of unlooked for peril and long before that moment had elapsed the bronco and I were on our way to the valley going faster it every breath, nothing to stop us death ahead and the devil's own tattoo under us. I was sitting almost erect in the saddle. The leather flaps had twisted around and kept my legs from rubbing against the sides of the trough, but held me like bands of iron. I did not faint nor did not get dizzy, there was a hideous roaring in my ears a furious wind seemed to all of a sudden tear up the mountain and such the breath out of my mouth but everything was deadly clear and distinct. I could see black spots grow suddenly into big pines and then shoot past me. I could even see the snow caught in their needles as they came whizzing up. Every instant through some echoing I could see the valley in a flash and over it all was a sickening feeling as though the mountain was sailing away from me, and I was plunging out into immeasurable space. So strong was this that even now, standing on the solid marble floor I can recall the qualm and nausea as all support seemed to give away the earth tip up and let me fall full full—it felt as if forever. A mass of rock as large as this hotel was from the me. As I looked it seemed to leap into the air like a balloon. There was a black line of forest below. I shut them hard as those in a tunnel and run it in again putting over it 'Republished by request.' That will save considerable time and you can go to press at once.' When the editor returned from the picnic and took up a copy of his paper he became justly indignant upon reading the following: 'Party Organization. Republished by request of the editor.'—Arkansaw Traveler.

BASEBALL

George G[illegible] of the New Yorks, is laid up with a strained [illegible] in the leg.

Harry Wright was born in York[illegible] England and [illegible]. He was once a jeweler.

The Wyer's made quite a hit while they played [illegible] on third and Hallman on second.

The Boston Club does not feel that they have secured such a prize in old Jack Manning. He often hits the ball off.

McMullen the Metropolitan California pitcher shows up very well in his practice but it will take a few games to demonstrate his usefulness.

With McCormick, Gleason and Morris the Pittsburgs should hit the better part of them they do. There's something wrong somewhere.

Boston people consider Johnson the best center fielder in the country. Perhaps Welch and Corey would like to express an opinion on the subject.

The Chicagos want to try young Ryan behind the bat and on first base then he will have filled every position on the nine. He is a good player.

Old Joe Gerhardt is all keeps up his wonderful juggling of the Mets. Not only the change of ambs, but making todd walk first base also hitting the ball.

See the famous Yale pitcher, expects to become a preacher of the gospel. Hence his refusal of the tempting offers to play with professional clubs.

Ted Sullivan has given up all hopes of securing the management of the Indianapolis club and has gone to San Diego to manage the team of that city.

Twice this season have the Washingtons taken to the fields batting and hammered it all over the field, yet they could do nothing with Madigan and Conway.

Buffalo seems to be the [illegible] city in the International League. It also has about the best team that has the Manager Chapman has selected for his team.

The Hartford club seems to be a hard way for pitchers, yet when it was a chance to secure Weidman it refused him. However he is good enough for Detroit.

It is the boast of Troy City that it has the lowest salaried team in the International league. It is nothing to boast about as the teams work out indicate as much.

The height reached in the pinnacle has opened rather tamely. However there is little doubt that it will end with a rush. New York and Chicago will then be among the leaders.

Capt. Tom Burns is to Baltimore people what Mike Kelly is to the Bostons. Tom is applauded every time he comes on the field at Oriole park Baltimore. He is at the head of a winning team.

It now looks as though Deacon White had outlived his usefulness. The Detroits talk about shelving him in which event young Shindle will be placed at third base. Lately guarded by the good deacon.

OF INTEREST TO LABORING MEN

The San Francisco butchers are actively warming on Chinese.

The horseshoers on the Pacific slope are banded in a powerful organization.

The International Typographical union will enforce the nine hour working day after Nov. 1.

The strike of the ore handlers in Cleveland, O., has been settled satisfactorily for the strikers.

The Flint (N. Y.) Knights of Labor Manufacturing company, with a capital stock of $1,000 was incorporated recently.

Fort Worth, Tex., is to be made a wool and sheep depot with immense stock yards and scouring establishments. It now costs $1.40 to pay the freight on 100 pounds of grease and dirt and this is to be saved by the scouring establishments. Fort Worth boasts that she will get in at Philadelphia as a wool center.

The manufacture of real Russia iron is an assured fact and a plant will shortly be started in Cleveland, O., with natural gas for fuel. An American manufacturer has possessed himself of the secret process in use in Russia for making this variety of iron after journeying to Siberia to obtain it. Some specimens of the improved metal in question have been shown which apparently possess all the good qualities of the genuine article.

The machinery constructors of Newark, N. J., Boston, Mass., Troy, N. Y., Cleveland, O., Baltimore, Md., and Detroit, Mich., have taken up the Saturday half holiday question and intend to push it to a successful conclusion. In several other cities they are agitating for nine hours but it is probable that through the national organization there will be only a uniform demand made for the Saturday half holiday at present.

MUSICAL AND THEATRICAL

London when running under full musical pressure has about sixty operatic performances per month, and about forty concerts per week.

Nat Goodwin will have a new theatre in Boston it will be exceeded only by the Boston theatre in capacity and the prices will be from 25 cents to $1.50.

A passable story is current regarding the pride of an impresario. At a certain rehearsal the tenor said to his chief, "That aria is a little too high for me. Oh! transpose it a tone," was the reply. "A half tone," pursued the tenor "will suit me perfectly." "Sir," retorted the manager, drawing himself proudly up, "in my theatre we do nothing by halves."

Eugene Field says that the tape by drop curtain of the new Chicago auditorium will be 140 feet long 100 feet high and five inches thick and it will be illuminated with a hand painted tableau of Apollo the nine muses, and a company of nymphs approaching Chicago over the Michigan Central railroad and under the interstate commerce bill in a long train of Pullman palace cars.

THE OLD FOLKS

Mrs. Annie Maupin of Gasconade county, Mo., is a well preserved woman. She is 98 years old can walk two miles at a stretch, and has seventy two grandchildren.

John Dirou was born in New Orleans on July 18, 1787. He now lives in New York and makes a living by honing razors. At 80 he married a Hibernian lady of 19 and she supplements his efforts by doing washing and house cleaning.

Woodbridge, N. Y., with a population of 960, has two septuagenarians, eighteen octogenarians and two nonagenarians aggregating about 1,900 years. In 1850 there were in the town twenty five persons ranging from 80 to 90. The average is about the same still.

Among the deaths reported at the city clerk's office at Worcester, Mass., the other day was that of Mrs. Mary Cutler aged 106 years. She was the widow of Joseph Gould a soldier under Napoleon I. She died at the residence of her son near New Worcester.

THE AISLES OF TRINITY

Suits to Secure the Church's Possessions. The Corporation's Wealth—Graves.

Every known form of legal contest has been put in effect against Trinity for 200 years and Trinity has always been the victor. The city and state of New York, as well as individuals have waged war to secure her ribulous possessions. Hundreds of thousands of dollars have been expended to gain its millions. Battles of muscle and engagements where firearms have been used loom no little part of its history. Before and since the Revolution these disturbances and tragedies were common. Some terror, desperate effort, blasted hopes all darken those old days.

The original Dutch against the English crown stockholders were forever at war over the coveted treasure, and no ecclesiastic architect in his sorrel the hearts and pockets of men. No martyrs were burned but the relumble historians of those dim times have left at least two monstrous acts of injustice to five the poetic heart. In 1777 an old woman was kicked in the face and her husband wounded. The heedless church property protectors also took hold of Hannah Marsh, about 65 years old, pulled her down on her knees and attempted to put her head in a pail of slop. One wonders just how the grog happened to be sold on consecrated ground, but we must take history as we get it.

Trinity church authorities will not reveal the actual wealth of the corporation. Men who should judge will estimate it to be from 70,000,000 to $200,000,000. No details given away or sold, nor are long leases made and the annual revenues acknowledged to be upwards of $700,000. Its educational and charitable institutions are many. The parish contains seven churches and the same number of schools, large sums returned over to the Episcopal and diocesan funds, allowances are made to several missions. Trinity hospital is maintained. St. Luke's hospital receives a large annuity, and from twenty to thirty churches outside of New York city are assisted. As a corporation it will stand through the years as stupendous illustration of unearned increment, of colossal wealth devoted almost exclusively to the upholding of an ecclesiastic aristocracy and of the wondrous possibilities of interminable litigation.

A strange sweet seizure will possess you as you wander about the solemn aisles of Trinity, and the pictures of the saints the grand sombre arches half lighted with a mellow richness which dreamily touches them from the flowing tracery of the unique and highly colored windows the mighty organ with its gilded tubes the pulpit canopy like a hovering wing, all fill you with a something that may be understandable pleasure that may be realized sacred sympathy and relationship but let these emotions possess you as they may, and if you are imaginative, let your fancy conjure whatever it will, the strangest dry dreaming and the most solemn association of thought are found within the other shadows that fall among the graves. The ground upon either side and in the rear is literally choked with them, and it is said a spade cannot be inserted without disturbing the ashes of some unrecorded one, while the crumbling headstones still standing in a sickly defiance of the centuries, jostle each other in a cruel way as if quarreling guarding their insecure portions.—Philadelphia Times.

Australia's Waterless Districts

Irrigation and the use of vast tanks are enabling man to triumph over the waterless districts. In one drought the colony of New South Wales alone lost 200,000 horses, 1,000,000 head of cattle, and 11,000,000 sheep equal in money to a sacrifice of from £12,000,000 to £15,000,000. Every year however teaches the squatters how to cope with this great physical debility. The result is that since 1860 several colossal fortunes have been made in Australia—larger fortunes, indeed than in any other portion of the world. Immigration into the antipodean colonies is at the rate of nearly 100,000 souls yearly. Wages are high and most of the necessaries of life extremely cheap. Beef and mutton of the primest quality range from 4d. to 6d. per pound, rabbits are 1d. and hares 1s. or 2s. apiece in the towns. In the magnificent forests is to be found timber in inexhaustible profusion and the giant gum trees, or Eucalyptus are the great features of the Australian flora. The big pine, or Sequoia gigantea of California is left far behind by the Eucalyptus amygdalina of Victoria. The California pine ranges from 200 to 325 feet in height, but the big gum tree overtops it by about 150 feet. According to Mr. Clement Hodgkinson, C. E., the tallest gum in Australia grows on Mt. Baw Baw in Gippsland and its total altitude being 417 feet. Place two tall elms each 70 feet high on top of the tallest Californian sequoia, and the Mt. Baw Baw cucalypt would overlook all three.—Australia Cor. London Telegraph.

A Mammoth Wine Vault

The mammoth wine vault in course of construction is the first object to strike the beholder. The outer walls are of brick and are thirty inches thick being a hollow wall and have attained their height. The size of the building is 270 by 300 feet and the walls are perforated with numerous double windows. The enormous roof is supported by 250 columns of heavy timbers set on brick pillars surmounted with a succession of arches, then covered with a heavy brick covering on top of which is a heavy layer of sand grouted in cement and asphaltum, the whole being surmounted with a shingled roof of several peaks and gables. It will require 1,700,000 shingles to cover this gigantic structure. It has a storing capacity of over 90,000 square feet, and will be filled with 1,000,000 wine casks.—Red Bluff (Cal.) Cause.

An Astronomical Puzzle

One of the most mysterious and remarkable of the changes witnessed in the solar system is the variation in the brightness of Jupiter's moons. Two of the four satellites occasionally cross the planet's disk as dark objects, although their sunny sides are presented to us and should appear no less brilliantly illuminated than the planet itself. The third and fourth satellites often make these dark transits and the first is sometimes seen as a brown object but the second has never been noticed otherwise than as a bright disk. During recent months observations have been made of quite a number of dark transits of the fourth satellite, and a very few of the third but in the course of the phenomenon remarkable without satisfactory explanation.—Arkansaw Traveler.

Effects of Lightning

A Texas negro was recently struck by lightning and killed. In his pockets were found two horse shoe nails, two copper cents that had melted together, a nickel that was partly melted and stuck to his watch, and the nickel rim around his money purse was also melted.—New York Sun.

The Work of Bobby Kerr In Favor of the Very Clever Mr Eaton—The Will To Be Contested

A friend of the STAR in whose statements we can implicitly rely, visited Upper Sandusky very quietly Wednesday and secured a glance at the much talked of codicils more recently added to Bobby Kerr's will There are four small quite lengthy and all made outside of Marion county—one in Wyandott Kan The first was made on the fourth of April this year

They have no reference to the bequests of land made to his children but pertain almost exclusively to the trusts for the grandchildren and the execution of the will Assuming Mr J F Hane's opposition to his western banking house as a reason Dan D Bobby removes him as executor and appoints in his stead W F and T A Hane, of Wyandot county and he makes John Eaton attorney of the executors and trust keepers instead of Jno F McNeal The Farmers bank stock is left in trust with J F Hane however, just as the Newark stock is left with Twatt

Eaton it seems has been playing a fine hand taking advantage of Uncle Bobby's dislike of Mr Hane's warning as to the karnes bank Eaton worked the change and secured the codicils It was a very clever scheme for it means dollars to him These codicils provide too that no bond be asked of the executors or trust keepers and should it be asked in more not to be over $50 000 But should the bonds be deemed necessary the provisions of the will will hardly prevent them

As the STAR penned the above line a little bird from Uncle Sam's home in the window and chirped It is to be contested I know—I know Perhaps the bird was much too well informed For corroboration however we need only to say that the items so displeased with the Land division as well as the plan of creating trusts and the execution thereof They will employ the best legal talent in Marion and aided by such prominent attorney as George Hoadly will attempt to set the will aside There is music in the air and there are scores of individuals who expect a pull from the grandsons of that very talented old man

ROUGH ON RATS

Miss Coutz, Residing Near Longville, Starts for the Mystic Beyond with the Lavender Rodent Poison She Dies

What has proven a very successful tempt at suicide, occurred at the home of Joseph B Coutz near Longville Wednesday morning Miss Coutz aged about twenty years for about two years On Wednesday she became despondent over her unhappy lot and concluded death was preferable to a wasting life Accordingly, she secured the bottle of Rough on Rats poison kept in nearly every home nowadays and took a dose sufficient to kill her Being alone in the house she worked very slowly and for nearly three hours she showed no effect as to what she had done Before noon however she was taken with convulsions and painful paroxysms of the poison together with vomiting Then it was that she told what she had done

A messenger was hastened to Marion for medical aid and Dr Clarke responded The doctor found that the family had fortunately administered milk and he gave antidotes and stimulants, until finally the would be suicide gave promise of recovery He left only to visit until the next morning, however, for she died at 7 a m Thursday The funeral was conducted by Rev Sutton on Friday

Kicked By a Horse

[Caledonia Argus]

Monday afternoon while threshers were engaged at work on the Brownlee farm just east of town Lewis Bailey a thirteen year old son of Widow Bailey, met with quite a painful accident All Downs was engaged in hauling the unthreshed grain to the machine one of his team being a young horse which Mr Downs is breaking for Sam Groves The team was standing at the thresher awaiting unloading, while young Bailey and one or two companions were busying themselves in dragging sheaves to the machine While thus engaged the boy Lewis passed the colt when the latter annoyed violently kicked him several times striking him in the breast and mouth, inflicting a painful wound The boy was picked up and borne out to town, where Dr Stone dressed his injuries Six front teeth were knocked out so that they could not be saved at all The colt is naturally vicious and when excited is very dangerous

Winchester Business quiet in town no sunstrokes that is new ones but a good many still feel the shade when the sun shines hot

Wheat is all in shock all that has not been thrashed or stacked A good many intend to thrash out in the field—generally a bad policy in my opinion Stack and let it go through the sweat before threshing but says one suppose it rains and the wheat spouts in the stack Don't build that kind of a stack Stack well and top out with cloud of hay Hay will save as well on the top of a wheat stack as it will on a hay stack

Wheat threshed better than was expected One of my tenants has threshed out had over 60 bushels more than he expected He had 247 bushels and expected less than 200 Ought to have had at a half crop 400 bushels

Oats generally cut and put in stack—very good

Hay nearly all made and put up without rain Have thirty tons for sale

Corn looks fair for a good crop if not cut by dry weather

Fruit very scarce Or in the Mirror some time ago, reported a good fruit prospect Such is not the case here We have scarcely any at all

Hunting new words from our village would be acceptable I hereby put a few facts and heresays

Our village is a thriving place and not a lazy person in it

We have two good stores which keep all kind of goods wanted in this community They receive a good business and would do more if people could just make up their mind that just as good goods can be bought here as any other place

Schultz Bros are energetic young men and will succeed

John Hostetler is doing a good business and we hope that success will crown his every undertaking

Prof Morman has changed his location to Fowler Ohio where he expects to teach the band of that place The Mozart band of this place expect to still keep him as their instructor He will give instructions to private schools here every Wednesday, and teach the band on the same evening

It is rumored that our Sabbath is badly demoralized by two of our most prominent men of this village John and Doc It is said that the sights about Kenton so affected John that he called for an extra chest stud

We think he is slightly demented since his return from the country of gas We think he has drank too much of the gas water that he talks about having found north of Kenton The Doctor says that the cause of Johns trouble is the fountain of the half beef and gas water aiding stable compound and is causing a derangement of the mental powers He can be heard at all times singing in these words A little more beef and a little more gas in water We would suggest to stay home on Sundays and a music and plaster be applied to the back of his head

Mrs Ada Earls is visiting friends in the neighborhood She seems to be enjoying life as she took well

Mrs Nellie Anthony of Little Sandusky has been visiting her mother Mrs Kennedy of this place

The Mozart band gave a splendid street concert here Saturday night and it was well appreciated by the people Success to the band

The sound of the thresher is heard on the land and wheat is turning out better than was expected

Hennis Kerr is spending a few days with Dr Briggs and Miss Butler

Mr Hoff Charles Butler and wife are recuperating at Miss Butler's He is the superintendent of the Defiance public schools

Proposed Newspaper Improvement

For a long time it has seemed to people of central part of the state that the Ohio State Journal ought to assume more metropolitan proportions The growing importance of Columbus and that portion of the State commonly known as Central South Eastern and Northwestern Ohio demands a newspaper service that shall be more especially the product of this section, and more specifically devoted to its interests commercially, politically and in the matter of news There are strong papers in Cincinnati and also in Cleveland But the more than fifty counties that comprise the territory mentioned above are abundantly able and are certainly important enough to maintain another strong paper in the central and most important city of the State As a factor in matters of the Republican party, it is self evident that such a paper should be published, and the list of it has been severely felt for many years There is no Republican paper in the State with a better record for reliability and a high out it of conduct in all matters

These things being true the announcement that the paper is to be enlarged to a standard size eight page sheet and fitted out with all the modern paraphernalia of a Journal of the first class will doubtless be received with pleasure by the public In its new form the State Journal will be the same size as the Chicago Tribune, Inter Ocean St Louis Globe Democrat, Louisville Courier Journal Cleveland Leader and others of like standing in the country The weekly edition will be also enlarged from forty eight to sixty four columns Additions will be made to the editorial staff and the scope of discussion of public matters enlarged and improved to comport with the proposed new order of things Thirty thousand dollars will be expended by the publishers in consummating these arrangements and the mechanical outfit covers a perfecting press and all the other belongings of a complete modern newspaper establishment of the first class There is no city in the State so advantageously located as Columbus for securing so many points at an early hour of the day with a daily newspaper If therefore, the State Journal covers the demands of its legitimate field, there seems to be no reason why this bid for public favor should not be accepted in a most enthusiastic and satisfactory manner to all concerned

MY LITTLE WIFE

My little wife! my little wife
When first I saw her face,
I wished the minstrel's art were mine
To tell its peerless grace
Had fancy touched the sweetest harp
By fairy fingers strung
Oh, who could twine a lay for her,
Whose charm could not be sung!

My little wife! my little wife!
I gaze into her eyes,
And as I watch the live light there
What tender memories rise!
Ah some are glad but most are sad
For oft from day to day,
Grief hid his cruel thorns amid
The roses by the way

My little wife! my little wife!
I hear she's growing, oh!—
But what care I if silver gleams
Have kissed her locks of gold?
Her beauty foils the hand of time
And shines it spite its art,
The vine that wreathes my fireside
The blossom of my heart

A NARROW ESCAPE.

The important day selected for my wedding was slowly drawing near But fifteen days remained, and already the newspapers of the neighborhood had announced to the world, in their blunt rhetoric, that the coats of arms of Mlle Suzanne de Stahl and M Roger de Caplan were about to be blended, when an untoward accident set all at variance

Mme de Stahl and her daughter had breakfasted at the chateau While waiting for the heat of the day to moderate a little, Mme de Stahl and my grandmother had seated themselves in a corner of the drawing room and were conversing in a low voice

"Roger" said Suzanne gayly, 'now is the time to redeem your promise Take me to the Hermitage as you said you would "

I had given this name to a small isolated summer house, a kind of thatched shed, which I had built for my own use in a grove behind the chateau It was my favorite retreat, on account of its rustic appearance and solitude, the silence of the spot being broken only by the shrill cries of distant peacocks and guinea fowls

We stole off noiselessly, and taking a short cut went out through a hidden gate opening into the fields For a time we tripped merrily along under an arbor of chestnut trees and climbing vines

She had slightly raised her riding habit, holding up the train with her left hand

I pushed a hurdle, and we started along the outskirts of a vast meadow, down a narrow, worn path, fringed with a hedge where, in the spring time, myrtles, lilacs and wild roses flowered pell mell amid the hawthorn bushes Here everything, untrimmed and untrained, grew up in a natural disorder that delighted me

I remember that, from the moment she stepped into the little path, and set out through the wide meadow, where all the fragrance of spring seemed to float up through the clear air beneath the blue, cloudless sky, it seemed to me that nature had bedecked herself with her brightest jewels to receive my fiancee, and, unconsciously, I repeated to myself the words of the poet

Down the narrow path tripp'd my sweet
Flowers springing up beneath her feet

She ran ahead of me, merrily, joyfully, now and then uttering delightful little screams, as a startled bird flitted out of the bushes, or a too lusty bee inadvertently grazed her hand or cheek I let her talk on, seldom interrupting her, too busily engaged in watching her graceful movements Yet, I will acknowledge, that I loved her without reserve I felt proud in introducing her to this little nook that I had created for myself alone, where no foot but mine had left its print, where some one of my thoughts still rested on each blade of grass and shrub I left

A warm breeze, redolent of the fragrance of the fields, made the hawthorn twigs tremble, the white flowers shimmering like pale flames A world of buzzing insects was humming chirruping playing and flying about us, while, overhead, the great sun shone in all his majesty My dog Toby shared in the common joy, and gamboled across the meadow or rolled in the sweet scented grass In my rapture I was ready to swear that everything around lived, moved, shone or bloomed for us alone I loved this earth, radiant and beautiful as a betrothed maiden, and from the depths of my soul I blessed that sisterly affection of Dame Nature displayed in the brightness of the day, the fragrance of the flowers and the songs of the birds

All the while my own true love, my beautiful amazon, blithely tripped along, ahead of me, and, as she confided to me all her dreams and hopes of happiness soon to be realized, she gayly swung her riding whip about her While sporting in this way she would now and then inadvertently touch the frail stems of hawthorn, and the detached flowers, fluttering like silvery butterflies, would fall to the ground

A fancy for this amusement seemed to grow upon her, and the flowers adroitly switched off, continued to drop right and left, while the bushes, denuded of their ornaments, appeared to me to be reproachfully holding up to my gaze their mutilated stems, like so many bruised fingers

"Roger," said she, laughingly, 'look, it is snowing "

In fact the white flakes fell faster and strewed the path

I made no reply Without being able to account for it I felt somewhat annoyed How could I help it? All that surrounded me, the meadow, the trees the hedge with its hawthorn, its lilacs and its wild roses, all had, as it were become with time a part of myself, so it seemed to me that each flower that fell was a part of myself dropping to the earth, and to avoid treading on them I instinctively turned my footsteps aside

Yet, I remember it well, she was at that very moment speaking of the poor who are oppressed, of the lowly who are disdained, of the pleasure she derived from going to their aid and as she spoke she would raise her arm, switch her whip around and tufts of lilacs would bend down and hang drooping like lifeless locks of hair

Against my will I became sad I felt like checking her arm

"After all, reflected I, "she does not think of what she is doing"

"Suzanne" said I to her "what are you doing '

"Who I" she replied gayly "why, don't you see I am amusing myself '

And the cruel riding whip wielded by a skillful hand switched right and left up and down, while rose leaves were scattered, lilac petals stripped off and daisies decapitated With a sweet smile on her lips she, the young girl, was exterminating the flowers

"Yet," I said to myself 'this have done her no harm None of them, I am sure, have got in her way, not one has pricked her fingers, or even grazed her dress Why then should she chastise them? * * * And still, what can I say to her now She does not understand "

So great was my fear of appearing ridiculous that I hardly dared say anything

"Suzanne" at length asked I, in a tone which I tried to render jocose, "you do not reflect * * * They suffer "

'They—who" queried she, half turning around

'They " murmured I, timidly I dared not say 'the flowers " but with my finger I pointed to the fields

She burst out laughing

"Really, Roger," exclaimed she, "you must have lost your senses! Flowers suffer! Oh, my but you are childish "

And poking fun at me, she moved on, still switching about heedlessly

What was going on within me? Was it on account of the flowers or was it my self esteem In this day I am ignorant of the cause that stirred me to anger so sudden and deep My other nature the bad one, was fully aroused and, on account of a few flowers I was getting as mad as a hornet

"Suzanne, said I, shortly after, but in a tone which, I must confess, might have sounded somewhat imperious, "stop that, please "

With a surprised start she half turned her head and asked

"I say, what is the matter with you, Roger?"

'With me? nothing—nothing," stammered I abashed but at the same time, piqued by the haughty manner in which she had put the question "But no—It is not right—I don't want you to do it."

"But if it pleases me" demanded she, facing about abruptly, and, with a slight, disdainful movement of her hand, a flower at my left fell to the ground, nipped off by the pliant whip lash

"Well," said I, losing what little patience I had left, "I will not allow it!"

And I made a movement to arrest her hand

'Then, all this is in earnest," said she, stepping back to avoid my grasp and casting up from head to foot in a defiant manner

"Yes," cried I, "I am thoroughly in earnest," but it was quite wrong of me to add, 'you have no feelings at all"

She became slightly pale, and without a word or reply she passed hastily by me Giving a short, downward switch with her whip, in the air this time, as it cuttin, through an invisible obstacle, she strode back to the chateau

My first impulse was to follow so as to try to appease her, but I could not muster up the courage to do so Besides I was still under the influence of my foolish anger, not enough so, however, to make me unconscious of the gravity of the offense conveyed by my last words

She retraced her steps along the path we had been following I did not take my eyes off her, but she never once turned her head When she entered the avenue of chestnut trees I lost sight of her at the other

My anger soon cooling down, I began more fully to understand the nature of the quarrel that had taken place I could only sum it up in these two words "It's absurd "

Return to the house! Why should it What could I say? Justify myself? To what purpose? The evil was beyond remedy She for forgiveness? Never! Besides to do so I would have needed more courage than I possessed Waiting seemed to me the best, though not the most commendable plan

In order to think over the matter calmly and to let events take their own course I passed through the thicket and walked on for a while at random I soon reached the outskirts of a small grove about 200 metres from the main avenue of the chateau Not wishing to get in sight, I threw myself on the grass and with my eyes fixed on the house I waited Toby stretched himself at my feet

A little later two horses were led into the yard Mme de Stahl and her daughter came down the steps alone, mounted their horses and started off at a gallop Aroused by the slightest noise, Toby sprung off at full speed toward them, barking as loud as he could

In passing by the grove the young girl accidentally cast her eyes in my direction Did she see me? Perhaps she did, for she raised her riding whip and brought it down upon the neck of her charger The surprised animal reared up on her hind legs To subdue him she belabored him with blows which, I verily believe were not falling on the shoulders she would have killed them to With ceaseless yelps Toby escorted the enemy to the entrance of the avenue then bounding back as fast as his legs could carry him he took his place at my feet growling still but in a tone which seemed to mean 'I have done my duty, haven't I? Now, let us live in peace '

As the sun began beating, his course toward the hills I decided on returning home

For awhile I wandered around the house and then set out in search of news Above all things to be feared was the reception my grandmother would give me At first I spied my old governess, who had looked for me in every room of the premises I asked her what she had heard

She told me that Mlle de Stahl had returned in a fury giving orders to have the horses saddled immediately On entering the parlor she related a long story of a hedge a riding whip and flowers of which it was impossible to understand anything, except that I had so far forgotten myself as to insult my betrothed Mme de Stahl had fully approved her daughter's conduct As to my grandmother she simply contented herself with uttering from time to time ejaculations of surprise insertion, that it was an absurd quarrel that must be smoothed, I must have been burft of my senses All this however did not prevent her from energetically undertaking my defense when on finishing her recital Mlle de Stahl applied to me rather uncomplimentary epithets

I was not more than half reassured when I entered the house Wishing above all things to explain matters to Grandmother I went immediately to the drawing room Not finding her present I descended to the garden but no one had seen her I was then informed that after the departure of her two friends, she had retired to her bedchamber Sending to ask her to receive me word came back that she was not feeling well and desired to be left to her self

I also went to my room and at dinner time found seven cock and bull stories as ancient as they were pompous, down Two or three times I thought I heard me I was bewildered by the contemplation of what would be the effects of my foolish anger all our plans upset Grandmother broken hearted my projects of future bliss cast away and all on account of an absurd fit of jealousy!

Night came on Well aware that all endeavors to sleep would prove futile I leaned my elbow at the window, and gave my self up to meditation

Still my relief had left in my fingers a certain nervousness, which gave me an excuse for my feelings It is your ally the cat, my kitten the count my second to all of this It was as if nature, whom I had endeavored to defend, was now trying to mollify me my cares I perceived from afar, in the starlight the spot which had worn of my footsteps and the sight afforded such pleasing sensations to my mind that even the shadow of regret was soon effaced therefrom I repeated to myself the words of which I had made use, and finally came to the conclusion that I had no fault to accuse my self of

I reflected on the freedom I had regained my old time life which would resume its quiet course in those peaceful spots I loved so well, and I fancied that everything Fir and wide the meadows and the woods, with their millions of voices chanting in the gloom, the trees and the flowers alive with a sense of gratitude were all saying to me, 'You assumed then best done well "

"Then, so be it still I to myself closing the casement "God's will be done "

And I threw myself upon my couch

The next morning my grandmother greeted me as usual Still there was no misunderstanding her first glance She was studying my face to see if yesterday's folly had left any traces there No explanation being asked for, none was given One thing struck me however and that was the absence from the drawing room table of the large bouquet of wild flowers with which my grandmother so delighted to gather, and which always stood there as an ornament Was it an accident or did the Lord old lady wish to remove from my sight everything that might evoke a painful remembrance Anyhow, day after day flew by, and the name of Suzanne de Stahl was never mentioned in the chateau Besides time, the great healer brought the needed panacea

Eight months later Mlle de Stahl became the wife of the Count P, one of our most renowned sportsmen, and took up her residence in Paris About the same time, wishing to devote myself thenceforth to artistic pursuits I quitted the country with grandmother, and re established ourselves in her mansion Rue de L'Ile

To day my punishment, and, believe me, it is no light one for it has now lasted more than three years, is to be compelled to meet my former fiancee at every turn The ebb and flow of the tide of Parisian life are continually bringing us together At the Bois, at the play or at receptions, if I do not happen to meet her, I hear nothing around me but words of praise, lauding the matchless wit and elegance of the beautiful Countess P—hold! I came near divulging her name! And each time we meet when I find myself in the presence of those proud eyes, bright as diamonds, but at the same time just as cold when I look at those lips so disdainfully curved, when I hear that haughty, domineering voice, when I reflect on her cruel, cutting wit, then do I say to myself "Most assuredly I did right But shortly after her glances seem to bewitch me, her voice so fervid her exquisitely modeled form so perfect, her carriage so graceful, that in the presence of this rare treasure I feel forced by a mere whim I cannot hush that other voice within me which, with accents of remorse, or at least of regret sighs from the depths of my heart 'Monsieur I did wrong "

And you kind reader what think you?

P S—Just as these lines are going to press I find the following paragraph in a daily paper, which makes a specialty of publishing items of this kind

There was quite a scandal yesterday in a grand drawing room of the Monceau quarter After a few remarks about a subject that we will not mention, all dressed to her by Count P, the beautiful, but rather irascible countess whose hot temper until now, was only known by a few intimate friends, threw her fan into her husband's face and, the same even ing, she left the mansion "

For the past two hours I have been walking up and down the boulevards The weather is gloomy and rainy but how pleasant life is! I feel as if my bosom, no longer able to contain my joy, were about to burst I can't restrain my feelings, and have an insane desire to embrace everybody I have just met my old friend, Monsieur Piquant, a happy husband he I question him cleverly He has not yet heard the news * * * Well, it is best he should learn it from some one else We have been wandering about arm in arm, for quite awhile The good fellow does not understand my gayety my pleased laughing countenance, and for the third time he asks me in a puzzled manner

'Old friend what makes you rub your hands together in that way?"—Translated from the French for Times Democrat

Our National Thick Headedness

James Payn in recent English notes in The Independent says "It seems to be the fact that what people in general delight in above all things is noise—the organ, of course if possible, but if not the hurdy gurdy or even the tongs and bones. If this were not the case it is impossible that the nuisance of bell ringing, should so long have been tolerated Letters from the relatives of sick persons are just now flooding the papers My mother has brain fever [and the jangling bells drive her mad] My sister, now on her death bed can only sleep in the early morning and then the church bells begin The existence of these letter is one of the many proofs of how much less the English like noise than we do " If Mr Payn should stay here awhile he would conclude that England is an asylum of silence One of the strongest impressions made on an American returning to his native land from foreign climes is that it is a pandemonium unmatched on the globe, that is, this is his impression if he does not happen to share in the national thick eared mess if you'll permit the coining of a needed term and is so rendered oblivious of noise —New York Graphic

PAST HOLE IN THE WALL AND ON TO CUBAS CAPITAL

The Wonderful Work of the Coral Insect. Reef as a Floor—Capturing a Shark. The Keeper of Double Shot Head Keys Lighthouse and His Wife

[Special Correspondence]

HAVANA, Cuba July 2—Over to the south of us loomed the Great Stirrup Key, a formidable danger to seamen, shooting out grim ledges which rose here and there above the water black and sprawling tentacles of some monstrous devil fish while back within the wirily rooted rose the lighthouse, white and solemn a sun majestic monument among the dark and dreary headstones of a myriad rotting graves. Still beyond and behind, and maybe a score of miles away, were seen here and there upon the flaming morning's horizon the black silhouettes of straggling giant palms and topping cocoa trees suggesting tired and worn sentries stark still upon some Nile land plain Tropic lands are kissed by ceaseless zephyrs intoxicated by wondrous odors, bathed and flood in eternal summer but now and then the sea or land, or both, present aspects which strike the receptive mind with a sense of loneliness that is awful

But there is not a more interesting spot on earth or sea than the coral Bahama banks To know all out them as you may by leisurely sail over them of from four to six knots an hour as was made by our heavily laden but sturdy old craft will pay for many a rough hour's experience in advance Everybody knows that somewhere off our Florida coast are the Bahama banks but whether they are banks of sand or mud or oyster shells or any the magical thing, they are, few but seafaring men know or care Even the latter rarely no means generally inform themselves about them, for vessels drawing more than fifteen feet of water cannot cross them The great steamer barks and ships reach Cuba from American and other European ports exclusively by the Bahama channel and Gulf of Florida—nearly always a rough bit of water on account of swift Gulf Stream tides and ever varying winds—and all other large craft bound west from Europe the northern side of Cuba leaving the Channels away to the north Little knots, little big mimics, half inches and half manned of lesser vessels make this romantic passage "across the bank" of sand of fourteen or fifteen feet of salt water between water line and bottom of keel Woe betide them, though for any miscalculation for while the balmy trade winds ever blow favorably and the path from Hole in the Wall Gulf wards is as plain as level as sunrise is passed, endless sea to sea horse, man many and many a skipper's told who has thought that there was "wet enough on the banks to float his vessel whether the big hogs mphers who have sounded every ships length over the sad main, I continued said so or not, has of sudden hit the keel of his craft grand into the flinty coral, and stanch as she might be, come to a groaning halt to be beaten to pieces by the waves or become plunder for the wreckers The latter lie in wait for just such reckless sea captains on every hand behind the keys and once let a vessel be thrown fetch caught in the coral teeth of the banks in almost an instant, in every direction the horizon will be dotted with the mast souls of ruin stricken craft all swooping down like vultures upon their prey

The Bahama banks proper begin at Matanilla, opposite the Florida bay of St Lucie They extend in a southeasterly direction gradually increasing in width to a point opposite the southeast coast of Florida from thence growing narrower and preserving a surface regularity generally conforming with the chain of islands the reefs terminating in Navidad bank just above the northeast coast of Cuba Their length is nearly 1 000 miles and their width varies from fifty to 200 miles To the east they merge into the Bahama Islands but on the west soundings of 800 fathoms have been made from the almost perpendicular sides of the marvelous creations of marine life for every atom of this almost inconceivable formation is the result of insect labor

To seem some little rift of this deep sea wonder close your eyes for a moment and imagine a chain of mountains, thousands of feet in height, against one side of which stands a propitious mass like fossilized honeycomb, white as snow extending thousands of miles and rising like a wall to nearly the elevation of the highest peaks, and whose upper surface for all this distance, is as level as a floor That is exactly what you could see here, could the ocean be sucked dry, and you'll allow it to stand in the tremendous channel here the Gulf Stream chafes and surges eternally

The width of the banks at Hole in the Wall is no more than seventy five miles but the coast is sailed without exception by vessels bound for Cuba bears so far to the south that the distance is a trifle over 150 miles Every inch of this inhabited like surface can be seen from your vessels deck Station a sailor amid ships and let him heave the lead every five minutes during the whole distance and he will call out all day long Two an a half fathom sir! "Two an three quarter fathom sir! Two an' a half sir!—an three quarter sir" until the sameness in tone and depth would be startling

The water itself is remarkable in brilliancy of color and transluscence Such shades of green were never elsewhere seen The breaking fringes of every wave cap or rolling scroll of water is seen threaded with emerald glittering among the snowy white with a spark, gleam and shimmer that are entrancing

And what a rare and wondrous treat it is to stand the day through at the vessel rails and peer down into the crystal spice where the witching forms of sea life move in their strange ways and silences with such friendly soft loving nearness! Why it seems that you can step out upon that floating floor of white and wander it will with these sprites of the sea You feel that you can reach over there and drag your hand softly over these dainty tresses of sponge which now and then will pass beneath it, and with the scoop net with which you used to catch minnows when a boy you could take snapper, hammon, jew fish, sea fish and a hundred other fearful unnamed mites which smartly flit this way and across from very eyes and you thrill to do it In me this was a day of days, all too short but one of those days in a man's life which from its hint of the marvelous forms and curiosities in main mights secrets ridiculously out but a foot of it but visions of infidels in the making, inveigh of the omniscience of the creating God

More than once the Tramus tubby hull and flat keel rapped into beds of sponge and coral that could not be checked one foot Then it was that every man became sublime in his blasphemous paragraphs I say paragraphs, for they were constructively such and the breaks in delivery were only where mortal laws necessity compelled the emerald waves was very beautiful indeed So one night and I left a accident came from our trip across the Banks save when we anchored at night at the edge of our lair wishing daylight for the rough jump into the gulf—we caught a tremendous shark, and, still more remarkable, each and every man aboard confessed it to have been the very first he had ever helped capture It was nearly sixteen feet in length an unusual size it took every soul of us to get him on board He snapped and thrashed with his awful jaws so dangerously that an iron pump spike five feet long was thrust between them and then with this great iron bar he did such rapid gymnastic feats over the deck load that he drove us all forward and aft like a bevy of sheep until we got by good luck, a great timber across his back and sat on its ends like boys "tattering" and thus we smothered his gallant life out of him

I can imagine how the goggle eyed scientists would have beamed over him, and called him a grand chasmobranchite, lovingly But we just chopped him up leisurely boiled out his bone and teeth for souvenirs, and tossed his red spiced remains overboard to feed his poor relations with It is thus that tastes differ

The next night about midnight I was awakened from my sleep by a remarkable war of words a few feet distant along starboard and ships Startled by a glare of light from the same direction I hastily arose and found our captain in his night shirt, drawer rubber shoes and sou'wester hat striding up and down the schooner's side, treading with rage puffing at his pipe wildly and swearing as I had never heard him before I saw he was carrying some bully object in his hand and a moment later I saw him turn and hurl this dark object down toward where the light came from, and heard it strike with a loud thwack and smash as if upon a boats bottom Then he swore some more and eloquently Gaining the wheel I saw a common yawl boat with a flaming cresset at the prow a 100 pound woman in the stern and a 100 pound man at the oars The woman was a helpless the man as the husband of helpless always are—a broken reed She was here armed but headed and bare legged He was muffled up as if to hug to the little life left in him She had a dozen or more heavy moles protruding from the greasy wrinkles of her face The mans countenance was like a sent par boiled over a pound of bones He's pretty pair solely occupied Double Six Head Keys and kept the lighthouse there The English government I confidently taking cognizance of the woman's devilish nature, had set the couple out here in this endless isolation But they were still impressible under the woman's cunning prowess The yellow light from their stormy home shot at us from a few miles distance over on our port quarter and I learned when on breakfast captain had quoted somewhat that they were known the seas over as the most colossal beggars in the oceans history that they lay in wait for every vessel passing north and south and after hooking on I won't trance this way for mules, begging and bullying for anything they might wheedle or force from the ships stores—on this occasion the tribute being the toughest old piece of corned beef the cook could take out of the barrel with the shark hook

By the next midnight the great light on the tower of Morro Castle was dimly sighted, at dawn the grim headlands along the north shores of Cuba were clearly visible, and soon we were in fine view, though laboring through a tremendous sea of the strange and quaint city of Havana the gay, winsome and romantic capital of the enchanted Antilles pearl

CARTS AND CABS

Two Wheeled Vehicles of Semi Savage and Civilized Life

[Special Correspondence]

BOSTON July 18—I had occasion to take the hansom cab with a friend of mine this morning, and I saw threaded our way through the narrow and crooked streets of the Hub, my friend who is a traveled man, fell to talking of the various two wheeled vehicles he has seen in different parts of the world

'Perhaps the strangest vehicle of any kind I ever saw, he said is the cart used by the Indians on half breeds of the northwest Its chief peculiarity consists in the fact that it is made without the use of an ounce of iron of any sort The shafts axles and wheels are made of some tough wood, the axletrees and linchpins of the iron wood of the northwest, and

the various parts are bound together with rawhide thongs or fastened with iron wood pins I don't know whether the iron wood used is the same as we find in the states, but I do know it is a very hard tough wood and that the carts made by the Bois Brules of Manitoba last about as long as any farmers cart in New England No they wouldn't last so long here, on hard roads

Who are the Bois Brules? Well, they call themselves métis but the whites on there call them halfbreeds and Bob Rubys. They are descended from the Scotch trappers of the Hudson Bay company, and are brown in color hence the French term, bois brules, signifying burnt wood

They harness a single ox to one of these carts and it serves for every purpose to which a wheel conveyance can be put. These carts means used by the Chippewayans and the Swampy Crees of Manitoba and Dakota '

BOIS BRULE CART

The hansom cab is a rather new importation in America though it has for many years been the favorite cab in English cities, especially in London where it originated It is an easy thing to ride in but one can't but wonder how a driver manages to keep his horse under perfect control from his perch over and to the rear of the other head Yet we rarely hear of accidents to hansoms

In some cities in this country standard cabs are used instead of hansoms but they don't ride nearly so easily The standard cab is driven on wheels with the door at the back and the driver's seat in front

OUT OF A JOB

Answering Worthless Advertisements and Cheated by an "Agency "

[Special Correspondence]

NEW YORK July 18—In a city like New York the greatest center of immigration in the world and, for its size, the most densely populated of all cities there are thousands out of work day after day seeking employment and finding none

It is the inevitable result of artificial systems of labor that a large population must ever remain idle No amount of coin influence or even money, can find work There are too few situations to go round, and in the fierce scramble for employment thousands get trampled into the mire of poverty, starvation and crime

The unemployed amuses himself by answering the advertisements in the daily papers for help wanted in the vain hope of securing a position The so called positions advertised as vacant are either too desperate or too unmeaning to get filled privately

A situation is offered to an energetic man with some knowledge of business," the salary being $15 a week This invariably turns out to be a request for the services of an ordinary book canvasser who is required to take so many orders a week before the salary is forthcoming

There is no business in life so easy to succeed in as book canvassing according to the man who sells his heels on the office desk The victim who through force of adverse circumstances or criminal want of judgment ventures to canvass books finds out very soon that the difference between glitter and gold is a very tangible thing

The circular beginning 'Cæsar was a book canvasser Napoleon was a book canvasser and Grant peddled books when he wasn't fighting etc has sent many a bright youth to an untimely grave

There are in New York an increasing number of so called employment agencies" that daily spread a tempting array of vacant situations going begging for men to fill them How the mouth of the unsophisticated youth, seeking a position must water at such a list to choose from He can be an office manager,' or one of the thirty two cashiers, seventy six correspondents or fifty six book keepers' wanted not to mention the 'floor walkers clerks typewriters, stenographers, draughtsmen etc But when he comes to taste these apples of Sodom he is apt to make a wry face

Your correspondent when in a restaurant a few days ago met an intellectual man out of employment All his efforts to obtain a position met with disappointment He stated that it was impossible to obtain a position of any respectability without the most extensive influence or money to buy it

"Take my own case' said he 'I am the graduate of a university and have been an editor an insurance agent and for some years had charge of a stock brokers office I am a first class correspondent can keep accounts and hold the very highest references from all my former employers, and find it impossible to obtain a position I neither chew nor smoke gamble nor steal swear nor drink, yet nobody it seems, wants to give me employment I am now six months out of work and having a wife and three children to support you may guess I am very badly off.

'I have replied to hundreds of advertisements and am fortunate if I get one reply to every ten letters I write and even then there is always some technicality that defeats me

'An insurance company told me my application was second on a list of seventy two candidates If the first name didn't get the position they would give it to me The first man got it

"A dry goods firm told me if I were only acquainted with the dry goods trade, I could secure the position of correspondent advertised They gave it to a dry goods man "

"Have you ever tried any of the employment agencies?' queried the correspondent.

"Yes sir, he replied, 'but I found them to be swindles, devised to prey upon the unfortunate

'I called upon a firm that advertised seventy two positions vacant, and told them I wanted work The manager stated that he could possibly obtain me a first class situation if I would only register my name and pay the fee of $5

'I paid the money and told the manager I didn't want him to look around specially on my behalf, but simply wished one of the seventy two positions vacant."

"Well' he said call to morrow and I'll fix you in a good job'

'I called, but he stated that the employer to whose good graces he wished to consign me had informed him that he was so well satisfied with the man he had sent over prior to my arrival that he wouldn't make a change But' said the manager, 'what objection have you to taking $1,000 position as cashier?

'None whatever,' I said, where is the job"

"Call in to morrow,' said he, 'and I'll fix you'

"Why not send me over now?' I inquired

'Well he said 'I must first communicate with the employer to appoint an hour for the interview You call here at 12 noon to morrow and I'll send you over to the man himself'

'So saying he gave me a melodramatic squeeze of the hand' to inspire confidence in him

I called the next day as arranged, but found the manager unaccountably absent from his office'

I remonstrated with the only other employe visible but the youth simply shook his head and said he knew nothing about it Call in during the evening again and you'll likely catch him' was his only consolation

'My place of abode was five miles off consequently each time these devils lightly asked me to 'call back again' ment a journey of ten miles and a loss of three or four hours' time.

'I called the following morning bright and early and I waited until the manager arrived, and asked him the meaning of the deception he was practicing on me I wanted to know why he wouldn't give me one of the seventy two positions he had on hand

'Is your business a swindle? I inquired

'He finally admitted after three days lying to me, that he advertised situations as vacant as bait to induce employers to inquire for help and was thus acting on my behalf

"No sir' I said, you put out the bait to still further bleed men who are bled by misfortune You are a swindler, sir!

' Get out of my office' he shouted 'get out!

This experience ended my connection with the 'employment agencies"

A VERY DEADLY NEEDLE

Hypodermic Injections Which Frequently Cause Death—A Physician's Views

That the drinking and smoking of laudanum and opium are not unknown vices in New York, my physician will affirm But there is no practice which is even more deleterious—the use of the hypodermic syringe To estimate the growth of this evil it is only necessary to take the testimony of druggists and dealers in surgical instruments The fact is it has become a problem with which social reformers must deal

A reporter talked the other day with a prominent physician upon this topic

"Many medical men' said he, "are unaware that the use of the hypodermic syringe is always attended with danger of instant death The cause of this danger is not well understood, but the fatal accidents that have been recorded were not due to the taking of larger doses than usual by most the, nor to the cumulative effects of the drug Cases have occurred in which persons have taken large doses for months without producing a single unpleasant symptom, and have died in a few minutes from the effects of a quarter of the habitual quantity taken in the usual manner and at the regular hour

'There is danger of fatality against which no vigilance can guard The symptoms are not always so severe as to produce coma unless arrested They occur about once in 100 administrations, and prove fatal at least once in ten That is to say a man who uses the hypodermic syringe at the rate of ten punctures a day, which is a very moderate average, should encounter the symptoms and their attendant danger of death once in every ten days on the average, and the probability is that they will prove fatal within six months after the habit is formed The danger that he may be found dead is thus always actual one with the habitue of the hypodermic a danger that may at any moment involve a coroner's inquest and the imputation of suicide "—New York Mail and Express
